FAMOUS WOMEN OF HISTORY.

MRS. FRANCES TROLLOPE (WHOSE BOOK ON AMERICA ENRAGED A NATION)—1782-1863.

Being fifty years old, never having written a line for publication, but being in the American idiom, "stone broke," it occurred to Mrs. Thomas Anthony Trollope, an Englishwoman of good family, to recoup her fortunes by writing a book about the "Domestic Manners of the Americans." Her qualifications in the way of observation were that she had spent three days in New Orleans and rather more than two years in Cincinnati, with brief visits to New York and Washington, about 1830. By way of fitting her to the judicial and fair she had lost her beautiful "beaux" she thought to establish in the Ohio city. The book, however, though the reflection of untrained literary endeavor, insufficient observation, and a natural bitterness against the land which had devalued the remnant of her savings, made a colossal hit. The British, hating us, bought it eagerly. The Americans, touched on the raw by her criticisms—many of which were wholly just—pursued it privately and denounce it savagely. Every cry of rage sold more books, and the good lady who had been counting her pennies drew in the royalties by the thousands of dollars. Exultant with success, she embarked on a literary career which was to last for fifty years of age, departed this life with 115 volumes to her credit—all of which, save the one which founded her fame and her fortune, are forgotten.

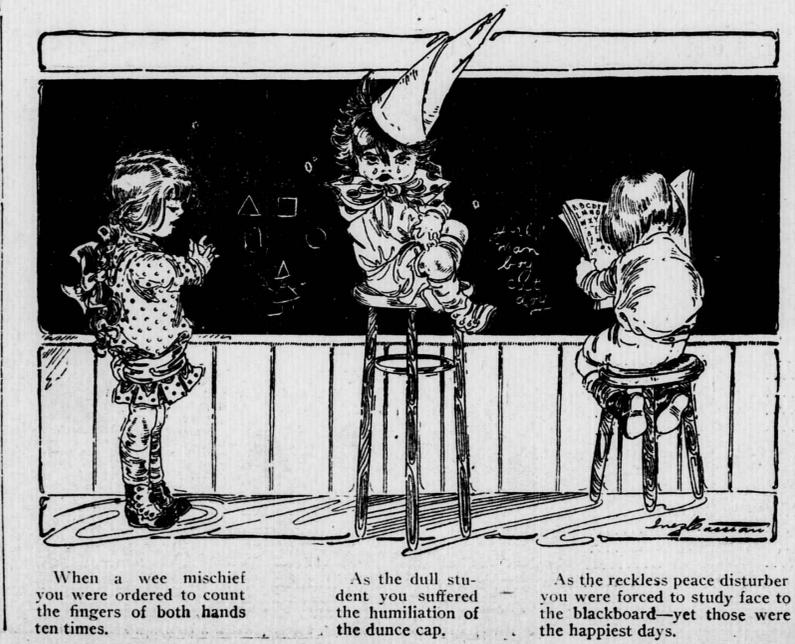

Much of Her Book True.
No candid American who will read Mrs. Trollope's much-battered book today can compare it with the writings of some of our own historians, notably Prof. McMaster, will deny that the measure of truth in what she wrote was exceedingly large. The outcry of the Americans of the day must have been based on the abandoned doctrine, "The greater the truth the greater the libel." Their provincialism was indeed made even more manifest by their superciliousness than by Mrs. Trollope's criticisms. Their defense was often worse than the offense. Mrs. Trollope was seen at the prudence which led the mads and matrons of Cincinnati to turn their heads away from the opera stage and to wear a blush when the ballet appeared. It is indeed an affection of modesty most excellently shown at the stage of today, which perhaps might be better for some shreds of it. Present-day readers of the North American Review, however, can hardly imagine even that state of periodical condemning Mrs. Trollope's flippancy, and denouncing the ballet, first, "because females not to shame not to be found to perform it on the stage," and second, "that they could find men and women of character to sanction the exhibition in the boxes." Mrs. Trollope further laughed at the hesitation of a too prudish miss to mention in intimate a garment as a shirt in masculine presence. The Review upholds the young lady, assuming somewhat the austere mood of Mr. George Washington's prospective mother-in-law when that embarrassed young gentleman sought to excuse his improper mention of an under petticoat with the remark, "After all, ma'am you know we know it there."

Admitted by Americans Today.
Most of Mrs. Trollope's comments on the manners and customs of the Americans she saw were just, and are so admitted by Americans today. Her error lay in taking her limited horizon to be coincident with the boundaries of the nation, and in accepting Cincinnati in 1830 as the most typical town, whereas it was really one of the greatest markets for hogs. The stately life of the planters of Virginia and of Kentucky she had no opportunity to see; New England, then the intellectual stronghold of the land, she never visited.

A "reduced gentleman" of England, broken in pocket by an unhappy speculation in the Boston National's yesterday, and will use him as an extra infielder. McKechnie played center field for the Bean Eaters in last Thursday's game with the Giants at the Polo Grounds. As Manager Stallings has a surplus of infielders, he asked for waivers on McKechnie, and Chance promptly put in a claim which was recognized. The new player will report to the P. L. at the Polo Grounds tomorrow.

Mr. Alfred Uehlein
Schlitz Brewing Co.
Milwaukee, Wis.

Dear Sir:
Answering your favor of recent date in regard to the influence of light on the quality of beer, will say that our observations, extending over the last twenty-five years, have convinced us beyond a doubt that exposure of beer to light has a very detrimental influence on its quality generally, but especially upon the flavor of the beer.

We have tested beers repeatedly in this direction placing the bottles into direct sunlight, and testing the same after one, two, three and five minutes exposure, found that the beer with three and five minutes exposure became undrinkable on account of the peculiar odor developed. The detrimental effect of light upon beer can be successfully counteracted by the employment of brown or dark colored glass bottles, and such bottles are therefore recommendable.

Yours very truly,
RW/B
Wahl-Henius Institute
Extract from letter to Mr. Alfred Uehlein, written by Robert Wahl, President of the Wahl-Henius Institute of Fermentology, Inc., Chicago.

"Beer bottles should be manufactured from reddish-brown glass, inasmuch as same will to a much higher degree than any other kind of glass, minimize the influence of the rays of light on the quality of beer, and will protect the later against acquiring the disagreeable taste (Sonnengeschmack) due to the chemical action of the light. **

"In white and green glass bottles the beer is most affected by the action of the light. Such bottles are, therefore, absolutely inappropriate and should never be employed by brewers." (Signed) Prof. Dr. F. Schonfeld

"Bottles of strong glass should be selected. They should never be of colorless glass, inasmuch as through the influence of light the beer will not only take on a disagreeable odor and taste, but will also become turbid." (Littner)

"The beer in the white glass bottle had taken on disagreeable odor and taste and was absolutely undrinkable. The beer in the dark bottles did not show this peculiar odor and taste." (G. Beck.)

"It is interesting to note the observation that beer in colorless bottles exposed to diffused light will undergo a change, precipitating a heavy sediment and taking on a disagreeable odor and taste."

"It is a known fact that sunlight and daylight influence unfavorably the taste and flavor of the beer and care must be exercised in the selection of the bottles of the beer."

POULTRY By Cocksbur.

A Few Figures.
Suppose we stop taking about coops and cleaning and feeding and diseases and the like and look over some of the poultry figures of the country. It is interesting to all poultrymen, be they large or small, to know what is being done around them. Many will be astounded by the figures pertaining to the raising of chickens in this country. Yet there is no gainsaying them. In fact, the figures do not tell all the tale of what is being done.

Puts Blame on American Sailors.
MEXICO CITY, April 16.—The Governor of Sonora in an official message to the central government places the blame for the killing of the two American sailors at Guaymas last week on the sailors themselves. According to this report one of a group of intoxicated sailors attacked a Mexican. The chief of police, who went to his rescue, was, in turn, assaulted with clubs and fists, when he drew his gun and fired.
