NEW CONGRESSMEN MODEST

Write of Their Achievements for the Latest Issue of Congressional Directory.

LAFFERTY HOLDS RECORD FOR CARE AS TO DETAIL

Some of the Budding Statesmen Predict That They Have Brilliant Futures Before Them.

Modesty is not the predominant feature in the biographies of new members of Congress, as shown in the Congressional Directory for the present session, issued today. It is easy to pick out the new members, as a rule, by the fact that their biographies are longer than those of such members as Representative Underwood, Representative Mann and other veterans. The new members have gone into great detail as to how they happened to come to Congress, and some of them predict considerable success for themselves. Some give their own businesses a few lines of advertising in the pages of the directory, giving the names and addresses of mercantile companies, law firms, mines, etc.

The biographical material for the directory is furnished by the congressmen themselves, and therefore, they first hand claim to authenticity, so that when one reads of Senator William Thompson of Kansas that "his political success is almost without parallel in the history of the state" it comes from the fountain source of knowledge concerning Senator Thompson, who further writes about his family. It is acknowledged by all who know him that as a senator he will not only bring credit and honor to himself, but to the state and nation as well.

Lafferty Holds Record.

While most of the long-winded laudations as to public character are confined to the new members, the longest biography in the book, and the one filled with more family details than any other, is that of Representative Lafferty of Oregon, who came for the first time last Congress. Mr. Lafferty's biography is something in the nature of a family tree. It tells where all his brothers and sisters were born and where he was born; where all the folks are living now; where his various forebears were born and what they did to distinguish themselves and prepare the family name for so illustrious a descendant. Many of his kinsmen have followed the art of war, even his brother Rolla, who is mentioned in the directory as having enlisted when but sixteen years of age and who left the army with the rank of corporal, next above that of private. Mr. Lafferty himself was a national guardsman. When he entered on his life of service to the public he was in the government employ, a special agent in the nature of a family tree. What he did to right the wrongs of the settlers in the far northwest and to prevent the government from being robbed of an emperor's ransom is all told in detail. To show that success has not turned his head, Mr. Lafferty remarks in his full name is Abraham Walter Lafferty, that his friends call him Walter and that his signature is "simply" A. W. Lafferty.

Newspaper Men in Congress.

The directory shows many a newspaper man who has tired of fighting the enemy with the typewriter, and who has gone into the battle of ballots as a candidate. Representative Kavanaugh of Arkansas is the first one to come to light in the book. He says he has held every position on the Arkansas Gazette from reporter to editor and manager. Representative Keating was an active reporter and editor for twenty years in Colorado, before he decided to represent a district from that state. L'Engle of Florida says he has had considerable trouble running his papers.

"In his determination to establish a free journal in Florida," says the biography, "he was twice forced to suspend publication because special interests objected to the truth about public affairs. His third journal, Dixie, published weekly, appears to be strong enough to live."

Mr. L'Engle also says that he studied in the public schools of Florida, "and is still trying to get an education." Representative Albert Johnson of the state of Washington was a reporter and night editor of a morning paper in this city during the Spanish-American war. Clyde Taverner of Illinois, who writes pieces for several papers even now that he is a member of Congress, uses the directory to advertise his business, and to tell the world that he can furnish live Washington topics for pay. He says he was desirous of writing political articles unimpeded by the policy of any paper and therefore got into the business of sending out independent signed articles. He met with many rejections and blanks all his rejection slips on the courageous attitude he took in writing.

He Defied the Editors.

"These letters were so independent and original in character," he says, "that at first no editor would publish them; notwithstanding this he continued to write a letter every day for 1,400 days, or four years."

Representative Hughes of Idaho says he served four years as president of the Georgia State Agricultural Society "with great ability." Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois says he has "held incidental offices in general forms of trust ordinarily reposed from time to time on the ordinary citizen."

Representative Fred Britten of Chicago makes mention of a unique event in the politics of the only man in the directory in the Sixty-third Congress who defeated a sitting representative. He is a republican and beat Representative Evans, democrat. Representative William Henry Wilder of Massachusetts has taken out over fifty patents. Samuel W. Beakes of Michigan spent only ten days campaigning.

Senator Vandaman of Mississippi and Representative Thompson of Oklahoma bring William Jennings Bryan into the directory. The senator says "he is one of the first men in the south to take up the cause of William Jennings Bryan, and has been an ardent supporter of the distinguished Nebraskan from that time until the present." Representative Thompson says of himself that he "has always been a progressive democrat and an ardent supporter of William J. Bryan."

Gave Plot to Novelist.

Senator Key Pittman of Nevada was attorney in a lawsuit in Alaska which laid the foundation for Rex Beach's novel "The Spoilers." Representative Fess of Ohio is the only man in the directory whose all children are and what they are doing. The biography of Representative James Sanford of Oklahoma says he was once speaker of the Cherokee legislature, "the only unmarried white man who ever held that position."

Representative Allan B. Walsh of Tennessee, N. J., "has the distinction of representing the home district of President Wilson and also of being the first democrat to be elected from Mercer county in fifty-seven years."

Representative Bremner of Passaic, N. J., says he was nominated against his will and Representative Clancy of Syracuse, N. Y., says he was terribly surprised when elected because he thought it was a joke and that he is looked on "as a political curiosity." Representative Charles Manly Stedman of North Carolina is one of the twelve soldiers who were engaged in the first battle of Bethel, and who surrendered with Lee at Appomattox. Representative Defender of Pennsylvania says he built and operated the first woolen mill in the United States. Representative Murray of Oklahoma

WARNS THE MULTITUDE.

Rev. Dr. Montgomery Denounces

Gods of Bacchus and Moloch.

Preaching against what he called the gods of Bacchus and Moloch modernized, Rev. Dr. James Shea, Montgomery delivered a sermon at the Metropolitan Church last night on the evils of self-indulgence and excess, and ambition and tyranny. He condemned excess and the passion for money and power. He said, in part: "Bacchus, the 'modern god' of self-indulgence, excess and tumultuous pleasure, is with us. A gay, frantic multitude in his train. They are just living for the beads that sparkle on the rim of the cup of pleasure. They shine, sip and swim, and, like a man working in the boiler shop, they hear nothing but their own noise. Moderation and modesty are the patent marks of elegance. Easy marriage makes easy divorce, and this is the legitimate fruit of a social life that recognizes but few bounds. "Moloch is another 'modern god'—the god of selfishness, cruelty, power, ambition and tyranny. He also is in our midst today. His throne is in the factory, mine and shop life of this land, regarding but little distinction between a human being and the machine he operates."

DISCUSS JULY 4 PAGEANT LATTER PART OF WEEK

Chairman Rudolph to Call Meeting of Committee to Consider Ways and Means.

Whether or not a historical festival is to be arranged for Washington's Fourth of July celebration probably will be definitely determined this week. Commissioner Rudolph, chairman of the "safe and sane" committee of the District of Columbia, stated today that he intends to call a meeting of the committee by Friday or Saturday to consider the matter.

Directors of the Washington center of the Drama League, who at a meeting Saturday proposed a historical pageant for Independence day, will be invited to attend the conference of the "safe and sane" committee.

"I am in favor of an educational festival, commemorating historical events, as the feature of the next Fourth of July program," said Commissioner Rudolph today, "but it remains to be seen whether the undertaking can be financed. The 'safe and sane' committee has had the matter under consideration for three years and would have provided such a form of entertainment last year, but for the fact that there was no money in sight with which to undertake it."

"I hope the Drama League members may be able to present a plan which will solve the financial difficulties that heretofore have been a bar to arranging a celebration of this character." Members of the "safe and sane" committee generally are believed to favor the festival plan, and it is considered likely that at the meeting to be held this week definite steps will be taken looking toward the carrying out of the proposal.

What the cost would be is largely a matter of conjecture, though it appears fairly certain that the expense will be in the neighborhood of $4,000 or $5,000. Commissioner Rudolph said that the presentation of a festival would not necessarily mean abandonment of the night fireworks display, although it would result in the calling off of the usual daylight fireworks exhibition.

FOUND DEAD IN BEDROOM.

Mrs. Christina P. Fletcher Heart Disease Victim.

Mrs. Christina P. Fletcher, widow of Cyrus D. Fletcher, a veteran of the civil war, was found dead in the bedroom of her apartment at the Cecil, 15th and L streets northwest, this morning.

Coroner Nevitt was notified, and after an investigation gave a certificate of death from heart disease. Mrs. Fletcher, who was sixty-three years old, resided alone in apartment 902. She was seen sweeping the bedroom Saturday, as was her custom. That was the last seen of her alive. A relative went to the apartment this morning to visit her, and it was then her death was discovered. She was lying on the floor, while beneath her body was a broom with which she had been sweeping the room.

It is thought Mrs. Fletcher suffered an attack of heart trouble and fell to the floor, expiring within a short time.
