

TELL OF OUTRAGE IN MINERS' STRIKE Women Narrate Horrors Witnessed in the Colorado Coal Fields. DECLARE DRUNKEN GUARDS HELD A REVEL OF CRIME Judge Ben Lindsey Outlines Plan of Settlement Submitted to the President.

True stories of three women, telling their own experiences during the "massacre of Ludlow" in the Colorado coal fields strike, vouched for by Judge Ben R. Lindsey, by the chairman of the Denver woman's relief committee, and by Representative Evans of Montana, who, on the authority of Congress, went to the coal fields to investigate, thrilled an audience that packed National Representatives' Hall last night.

The women told an almost unbelievable tale—one of them, a mother, whose three children had been burned to death—just as they had told it more briefly a couple of hours before to the President.

Representative Bryan of Washington urged support of his bill before Congress for the President to take over the Colorado coal mines with federal soldiers and to operate them for the people, while the Attorney General institutes condemnation proceedings—and he got vigorous approval.

He had a bitter verbal clash with Representative Kindel of Colorado, who spoke from the floor and tried to amend a resolution introduced by Judson King, endorsing Representative Bryan's bill. Mr. Bryan heatedly told Representative Kindel that the meeting would be better off without his interference, and Mr. Kindel defended his course for twenty-five years as a champion of the people, and as having fought John D. Rockefeller for years before the coal-field war ever aroused public indignation.

Rockefeller Is Condemned.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was attacked and condemned in no uncertain terms by many speakers, who held him responsible for the lawlessness that resulted in murder, arson, looting and the state legislature of Colorado were scored as having failed utterly in their duty to the citizens of the state. The statement was made at the meeting by Mrs. Mabel Murray, who said that she had seen the bodies of the miners' wives and children in the coke ovens or a deep well, but the authorities prevented her from prosecuting the search. She was ready to fight for their lives and honor. She told that attempts had been made to burn the bodies in the coke ovens, but she had placed affidavits in the hands of the coroner, and the miners' tents were set on fire. She said she was told that twenty people were killed in the burning of the tents. Proposals by Lindsey.

1. To keep the federal troops in the coal fields; prevent importation of strike-breakers and foster conciliation between the mine workers and the mine operators.
2. To extend to the police power and other powers that are his under the Constitution; to close down the mines and take them over in the interests of peace, and order; to force arbitration; to haul Mr. Rockefeller into the high court of public sentiment and force him to come to terms.
3. In the interests of many foreigners in the coal field, who have applied to their consuls for protection, the President should act in such a way as to show other nations that this country will not foster or tolerate a spirit of anarchy; that the President has ample power to act summarily and that he will be backed up by public sentiment.
4. Judge Lindsey said the President had assured him and the delegation of women with him that he had the utmost sympathy for the miners and commiseration for the conditions that he would take the propositions of Judge Lindsey as the most serious consideration.
5. In the interests of the nature of a forum, under the auspices of the Washington Woman Suffrage Council, and was presided over by Mrs. Glenna S. Timmin, who introduced Judge Lindsey.

Lindsey Tells of Outrages.

The judge said, in part: "The struggle that we face in Colorado is not purely local; the same conditions will continue to exist in varying degrees wherever and in proportion to the privilege that exists. One of the difficulties that we meet is to get the facts and another to get them before the people."
"A coal mine report—a state document that I could not get published showed two-thirds of which might have been prevented. Besides these directly made orphans there are hundreds and thousands of others indirectly through the occupational diseases, by the mothers being forced to bear a double burden both as laborers and breadwinners. We cannot stop this slaughter of the innocents by looking sympathetically into tear-stained faces; we must do as a doctor does in disease, learn the cause and cure it at the root."
"There is something radically wrong in the property laws of this country. The chief cause of strife between capital and labor is because of lack of personal contact between the two classes—absent ownership."
"The Ludlow massacre of April 20 resulted when the mine owners imported thugs and gunmen and paraded them as militia."
"He introduced Mrs. Pearl Jolly as the 'heroine of Ludlow.' Looking scarcely more than a girl, in brief, simple sentences, often ungrammatical, she told of how Louis Takus, a leader of the tent colony, had been fired upon while carrying a flag of truce; how when she put on a Red Cross badge to go among the wounded and to shelter the children she was fired upon and shot in the heel; how when the men left the camp and took to the hills to draw the fire away from the

Gen. Harries Tells House Project Wholly Lacks Support of Public.

Even Chronic Agitators Fail to Press the Idea Holds That Regulation of Public Service Should Be in Hands of Experts.

Brig. Gen. George H. Harries, ex-vice of Washington, and one of Louisville, Ky., introduced the District committee of the House today to lightsome phrase, mingled with practical logic, when he hammered the Croser bill for public ownership of the street railways of the District of Columbia.

Agitators Even Are Silent.

"And not even the garrulous few, the discontented self-selected representatives of the citizens who assume to speak for the silent and satisfied many, have come forward and cried for municipal ownership. This is a disturbing matter, and these self-appointed ones generally seize upon the disturbing matters for their agitations. But in this case even they have not done so."
"See what happens. Here in this proposal the United States wants to compel the District of Columbia to buy and operate the electric railways of the city, and then disavows its responsibility. What will happen to the securities when the United States declines to assume responsibility?"
"He was asked what people generally think of the bill," he said, "they haven't answered to it."
"People here do not look on it seriously at all," he said, "they haven't answered to it."
Further on he said, speaking of public utilities commissions:
"No Job for Diligent."
"The regulation of public utilities is no task for a dilutant. How can it be, when gifted though he may be, to whom an electric armature is as deep a mystery as the music of the spheres, achieves success on such a commission? These commissions ought to be composed of experts who have had years of study. They also have to be men who understand finance. And by that I do not mean
