Gossip of Society.

The young and pretty wife of the present Austrian ambassador, Mme. Dumba, has made several changes in the old embassy building on Connecticut avenue just above N street. The room at the left of the entrance, which has always been used as a sort of writing room, a large desk being situated in the bay window, has been considerably brightened by a change in the color scheme. The walls are now done in a vivid light shade of old blue and the furniture is upholstered in the same shade of color.

The dominant note now in this room of the embassy is a new portrait of the emperor. It fills the chimney piece over the mantel of the room mentioned. It is framed in gold, bearing a portrait in the center, and is a full-length likeness, but not life-size. The crown in the center is an artistic blending of red, all the background of hangings, table and chairs being deep, dark red, while the uniform of the emperor is of scarlet and white.

In the drawing room, "the salon," as Mme. Dumba calls it, clear, vivid blue is again in evidence, several of the chairs being covered in this color. The bracelet, the stones cut square, and set in flexible links of platinum, the sapphires extending all the way around the bracelet. A hospitable note of the drawing room is the grouping of chairs and tables around the fireplace, and everywhere there are flowers. On the table near the fireplace the other day there were a bunch of violets and a pot of crocuses, blue hyacinths, and so fond is Mme. Dumba and so well does she know her flowers that she can detect a distinct difference between the perfume of the blue and pink hyacinths. She says she can tell the color of the blossoms with her eyes shut, by their perfume.

The Austrian ambassador and Mme. Dumba have not yet decided upon what they will do this summer, where they will go for the "heated term," and where they will spend the winter. They want to be somewhere near New York, where the ambassador can go back and forth to that city. They intend to go to a quiet place, not to one of the fashionable summer resorts.

There are three perfectly good signs that spring has arrived in Washington. One is the old black crow that takes up its abode in the tower of St. Thomas' Church near Dupont Circle, and takes a benevolent interest in the doings in Church street. It has arrived and is established in its airy retreat.

Another sign is a flock of purple grackles, which come with the first intimation that winter has gone and swarm over the White House lawn, their raucous cry being the first bugle call of the young spring. And, third and last, the crocuses are up in all their white and yellow glory in the garden of Miss Freeman and Mrs. Buckingham, back of the stately brown sandstone house next to St. John's Church in H street. Their garden, which extends across the back of the house and over to 15th street, between St. John's and the parish hall, is one of the oldest gardens in Washington and the flowers that make their home there are quite familiar with the Washington climate and seldom make a mistake.

Mrs. Kutz, wife of Maj. Kutz, Engineer Commissioner of the District, decided that she cannot serve two masters.

His Family. as it were, in the matter of giving her time and attention to her children and to society, so she has decided in favor of the former, and she and the major and the young fry have most charming times together, and are so companionable that they are taken for brothers and sisters, when they go about together; in fact, Maj. and Mrs. Kutz are so young in appearance and thought and action, that Emily, the oldest girl, aged seventeen, says she is seriously considering adopting older-looking parents, as no one will believe that hers are really her father and mother, the other two children are Marion, who is fifteen, and Charles Randolph, who is nine.

Mrs. Randall Hagner, who, with Mr.

POPULAR HOSTESS.

MRS. DELOS HLODGETT.
At whose 16th street home many pleasing parties are given.

Hagner, lately returned from his wedding trip, is taking up her new matrimonial duties conscientiously and fits her morning constitutional to agree with the school hours of her new little stepson, after her walking arriving in front of his school as the children are coming out for the noon recess.

Young Randall, who adores his new "mother," rushes out to greet her and they then go home together.

Mrs. Hagner wears often for her morning sport a suit of rough greenish material, made with plain, full skirt and a hip-length jacket something on the order of a Norfolk jacket, with one pleat down the center of the back instead of three, and, of course, a belt.

Her hat with this is a brown straw, a narrow turned-down rim and large, full crown. In fact, the little hat is strongly suggestive of an inverted basket, especially as the straw is the large hollow straw, sometimes called barnyard straw, and a cluster of magnolia red posies one side of the front, and her furs are raccoon.

Another matron who is fond of taking the air with her young child is Mrs. Merriam, wife of Pay Inspector John Merriam, who is setting the good, old-fashioned of being her baby's nurse.

Mrs. Merriam wheels the youngster in his carriage of a morning up and down Connecticut avenue and across a street to the Wallon home, where they are staying with Mrs. Merriam's mother while the husband and father of the son and heir is away at sea.

Mrs. Merriam seems to enjoy the morning constitutional as much as the youngster, playing admirably the part of the proud mother, and her black suit with trimming of soutache braid and large sailor hat of black silk trimmed with crepe and faced with white crepe is mighty becoming.

Mrs. Joseph Leiter has successfully carried out the new idea in decorating, which is to depend upon color in a room in all the hangings and other draperies, and to keep the walls white or cream color.

The living room at the Leiter home upon the river is a large apartment, and it is so large a room, he made himself seem a safe bet that any other smaller one could be. The walls are a soft cream color with a wainscoting of light oak, gull-less of polish, and therefore a soft neutral shade. A dash of color is given by a row of French rattings which are hung just under the ceiling, the wainscoting, and the pastel shades in the pictures blending harmoniously with the background, on the railing are placed numerous photographs of friends and acquaintances in attractive frames.

Other bits of color are given by oriental fabrics and unique bits of bric-a-brac souvenirs of the trip around the world made by the host and hostess.

Teas for House Guests.
Miss Sarah Hickling was the hostess at a delightful tea yesterday afternoon given in compliment to her house guest, Miss Houston of Philadelphia.

The guests were prettily decorated with spring flowers, and Miss Hickling received in a gown of pink charmeuse with a beaded train, and Miss Houston wore yellow satin. Mrs. Arthur Smith poured tea and the others assisting were Mrs. Percy Hickling, mother of the young hostess; Miss Nellie Howard, Miss Anselma Roach, the Misses Grant, Miss Metcalf and Miss Helen Gramfield.

Mrs. Grace and Miss Edith Grace gave a small dancing party last night for their house guest, Baroness Vera von Hopp of New York, and today will give a tea for her. Friday night Mrs. Grace gave a dinner and theater party for the young Baroness.

The Crescents' March dance will be given at the Raleigh the evening of the 17th. The following members of the Crescents are on the committee: J. W. Mckercher, W. E. Trotter, Harry C. Slegourney, Lemuel H. Windsor, F. D. Slesler and R. E. Whittency.

Nemo CORSETS Stand Alone!

THESE three models—
Among the best-known Nemo's—date back four, five and ten years. Details have been conformed to changing fashions, construction and fabrics are improved; but the hygienic features have remained the same.

These models are in greater demand to-day than ever before.

What does that mean?
It means that women who have worn them can't do without them. There is no substitute. No other corset can give equal style, ease, long wear, and—
HYGIENIC SERVICE.

Through all the foolish corset fads the Nemo has come out stronger, more popular than ever.
