

THE EVENING STAR, With Sunday Morning Edition. WASHINGTON, THURSDAY, June 29, 1916. THEODORE W. NOTES, Editor. The Evening Star Newspaper Company. Business Office: 11th St. and Pennsylvania Avenue. New York Office: Tribune Building. Chicago Office: First National Bank Building. European Office: 3 Regent St., London, England.

The Developing Mexican Crisis. Carranza's compliance with the American demand for the immediate release of the prisoners taken in the Carrizal fight and held at Chihuahua greatly relieves the tension between the two countries. It makes for at least the preservation of the peace, even if it does not preclude war. It removes the most imminent issue between the two countries, leaving to be settled, if possible, the cause from which that issue arose.

However grave the situation may remain, it is undoubtedly true that the news spread last evening through Washington by The Star's extra edition is to be hailed as a token of present peace. That it was so regarded was plainly shown by the eagerness with which the news was received. The Star was rejoiced to give such glad tidings to the community.

In its present situation the case with Mexico, however, presents a further difficulty following an adjustment of a critical question. If the men captured at Carrizal could not legally or rightfully be held as prisoners—and Carranza's prompt release of them indicates that he recognizes the absence of right to hold them—what of the men who were slain and wounded at Carrizal? The United States can do no less for them than it has done for the men taken prisoner.

If our troops were at Carrizal by right they should not have been attacked. If attacked and injured and killed they were victims of a grievous wrong. The United States was through them affronted and must demand a redress of that wrong. It will never do merely to secure the release of the prisoners, for the major offense remains to be condoned. The conditions which gave rise to that offense remain for correction. The American job in and near Mexico is by no means finished. It is perhaps only just begun.

The United States does not want to fight Mexico. Everybody north of the border deprecates the prospect of a conflict, and hopes that a way may be found to avoid it. But practically nobody wants to avoid a fight for the mere sake of avoidance, for the sake of peace alone. We might withdraw every man from Mexican territory and maintain a strictly defensive watchfulness on the northern side of the boundary, putting no American foot on Mexican soil, however frequent or costly the raids made by irresponsible bands into our towns and ranches, whatever the losses suffered. We might mass a great army along the border, large enough to protect every foot of the ground, day and night, to keep these brigands from entering, putting ourselves to enormous expense, maintaining for Mexico an immense police force to prevent brigandage. But that would not cure the conditions, would not correct the essential evil. It would not implant good faith in the Mexican heart.

What is best to do with and for Mexico is a problem the difficulty of which is probably not appreciated by the American people. President Wilson is confronted with a dilemma which is taxing his judgment and patience and wisdom to the utmost. That he is endeavoring to find the best way, not merely for the sake of the people of this country, but for those of Mexico, is plain. Seldom has a chief executive been so faced with perplexity, and in this emergency it is the patriotic duty of every citizen to abstain from criticism, to withhold from militant advocacy of war as the assuredly only way to meet the case, and to allow events to develop without hysteria.

No peace negotiations have been proposed in tones loud enough to be heard above the cannon at Verdun. Again comes the recollection that Porfirio Diaz was the right man in the right place.

Albert J. Beveridge. Gov. Johnson of California announces that he will support Mr. Hughes. He joins Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Perkins and Mr. Flinn in their purpose to make the republican strength at the polls this year as great as possible.

This leaves only Mr. Beveridge unaccounted for. As Mr. Roosevelt was the leader, Mr. Perkins the financier, and Mr. Flinn and Gov. Johnson the organizing force, Mr. Beveridge is the orator of bull moose; and for four years ago the Indian took an active part in the cause.

Since then he has figured but little in bull moose affairs. He has not been among the pilgrims to Oyster Bay. He was not at Chicago. If he sent a message, it was not mentioned in the dispatches. If he thought that Mr. Roosevelt should again head a third ticket it was not announced.

What is the explanation of this? Certainly not that Mr. Beveridge has retired from politics for good. He is much too young a man, and too fond of and fitted for politics, for such a step. He got an excellent start, and went far. He reached the Senate at an age when, as a rule, men of political ambition are glad of a seat in a state legislature and willing to climb slowly. He landed at a bound in a body where veterans are proud to serve, and distinguished himself where oratory has always exercised marked influence. Maybe Mr. Beveridge will disclose his purposes later. Maybe he, too, finds the ticket of Hughes and Fairbanks acceptable. Why not? Mr. Fairbanks is an Indian. The same constituency that sent Mr. Beveridge to the Senate had sent also Mr. Fairbanks; and when the ticket of Roosevelt and Fairbanks was nominated Mr. Beveridge supported it. Again the state has been complimented by the nomination of Mr. Fairbanks for the vice presidency; and why, since bull moose is a militant force is now in the discard, should not Mr. Beveridge, for long a republican, give his approval to the compliment and stump the state for the ticket?

Mr. Beveridge left the republican party largely on account of the tariff. He was among the republicans who opposed the Payne revision and voted against the measure. But not because it recognized the principle of protection. He is a protectionist. That, however, is old history now; and the return of the republican party to power will bring up the tariff question in a form different from that Mr. Payne and his friends tackled seven years ago. Mr. Beveridge in the campaign asking votes for the republican ticket would present an interesting and influential figure.

Republican Harmony. Mr. Hughes and Mr. Roosevelt spent two hours and a half together last evening, pleasantly as both declared at the close of the confabulation. The time was probably not equally divided. But that does not matter. Mr. Roosevelt had a good deal to say, and is not easily headed when he sets off on a monologue. Mr. Hughes could afford to listen. His vis-a-vis at table had come pledging support; and to a candidate for office support is always welcome. There were no witnesses. Even the waiter was barred except upon call. But the picture is easily commanded by anybody with a little imagination, and some painter of established reputation may put it upon canvas.

Interviewed on Long Island yesterday, Mr. Taft expressed pleasure at the way things are taking shape, declared his willingness to help, and predicted Mr. Hughes' election. He thinks the support of Mr. Roosevelt will strengthen the republican ticket, and, replying to an inquiry, said he would not object to appearing with Mr. Roosevelt on the same platform.

To a large extent, therefore, if not wholly, the war is over. It was fierce while it lasted, and the damage considerable. An item of the damage from the viewpoint of the republicans, was the bringing in of Mr. Wilson, about whose course in office Mr. Hughes, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft are in perfect agreement. Each has expressed himself for publication, and each is certain to elaborate his opinion as the campaign progresses.

But agreement as to Mr. Wilson is not the only thing that brings these three men together. The republican platform is satisfactory to all three. Mr. Roosevelt would have accepted nomination on it, and Mr. Taft would not have changed a word. Mr. Hughes as the nominee is on the eve of giving full approval to all that his party promises.

Here, then, is something that looks very like reconciliation and harmony. A family row that shook things to the foundation is at an end. Shall we see a result which is often recorded in such cases? New ties more closely knit than the ties that were severed? Each of the old factions striving now to outdo the other in the common cause?

Four years ago such a union would have achieved a pronounced republican triumph. Mr. Wilson won against a divided opposition. Can he hold against a united one?

Mention by Charles E. Hughes of "the trumpet that shall never sound red" is in line with recent studies of this country, but for those of Mexico, is plain. Seldom has a chief executive been so faced with perplexity, and in this emergency it is the patriotic duty of every citizen to abstain from criticism, to withhold from militant advocacy of war as the assuredly only way to meet the case, and to allow events to develop without hysteria.

Germany and Switzerland. Germany's demand upon Switzerland for a commodity exchange precipitates a most interesting question which may lead to a new alignment in central Europe. Switzerland is in a peculiar and difficult position, being entirely surrounded by warring nations. It is an island of neutrality. Since the war began it has been under a most intense pressure from all sides, and especially for the past year, since Italy's entrance into the field as Austria's opponent. It has maintained a large army of defense from the earliest days of the war, and in addition to suffering a practically complete loss of its principal industry, that of entertaining tourists, and a serious entanglement of its manufacturing industries, it has borne a heavy expense for military preparedness. In these circumstances Germany's demand for an exchange whereby Germany will get from Switzerland cotton and food supplies "collected by German agents" and Switzerland will get from Germany coal, iron and other materials essential to the Swiss industry, presents a condition of peculiar hardship to the little republic. It is significant that Switzerland, asking for further time to consider the peremptory demand, has sent a delegate to Paris to consult with the representatives of the allies, presumably to ascertain whether supplies such as those heretofore obtained from Germany can be secured from other sources in the event of the stoppage of the German exports. If this can be done Switzerland has little to lose from a loss of German exports, while Germany must have much to lose by a loss of Swiss exports, else the demand would not be made in such peremptory terms. It is to be noted that the news dispatch refers to a German demand for the exportation from Switzerland of cotton and food supplies "collected by German agents." This can only mean that the supplies in question have been imported by Switzerland and resold for German use. Thus the case presents additional difficulties to Switzerland, for in the publicity of the matter it must involve an acknowledgment that traffic with Germany has been maintained in commodities that are the subject of the general blockade conducted by the allies. Probably the stoppage of the Swiss source of supply in cotton and foodstuffs would be a serious German loss.

Nebraska has no doubt developed some recent students of preparedness who are wondering what they could have wanted with Henry Ford as a presidential candidate.

A progressive must be sufficiently versatile to run a whole band wagon by himself, or if need be say "My lord, the carriage waits."

Prohibitionists are again accorded recognition as about the only third party possessing permanent organization.

Villa is no longer permitted to monopolize the distinction of being a proper object of a punitive expedition.

Carranza should not mistake an attitude of discriminating forbearance for an indorsement of a manana policy.

A very small government can sometimes offer a very big and valuable hint as to the need of preparedness.

Progressives who want to campaign under the personal leadership of the bull moose will have to enlist.

Carranza's obstinacy is no longer mentioned in terms of reproach by Villa.

SHOOTING STARS. BY PHILANDEL JOHNSON. A Movement Indorsed. "Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "I hear that some of the politicians want to efface party lines."

"Yes?" "Well, I just hope they do. Having your telephone ring every time a neighbor puts in a call is a perfect nuisance."

An Off-Hand Guess. "Why did Adam and Eve leave the garden after they had dressed themselves in fig leaves?" "I don't remember," replied Mr. Grovener. "But I have a suspicion that Eve wanted to go somewhere to show off her new clothes."

SCALP COVERED WITH SCALES. Head So Sore Could Scarcely Comb Hair. Itched and Burned. Collar Covered With Dandruff. HEALED BY CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT. From the New York Sun. "My scalp was perfectly covered with scales and when I would scratch my head it became so sore I could scarcely comb my hair. My scalp itched and burned till I couldn't sleep at night. I would comb my hair and my collar would be covered with dandruff. I didn't find any relief until I found Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I would rub my scalp at night with Cuticura Ointment and wash it off the next morning with Cuticura Soap. I repeated this a few nights and my scalp became clear and my hair full of life, and I was completely healed." (Signed) Miss Rita Love, Route 1, Bee Branch, Tex., July 6, 1915.
