Cook Bill Bright Mending Shoes.

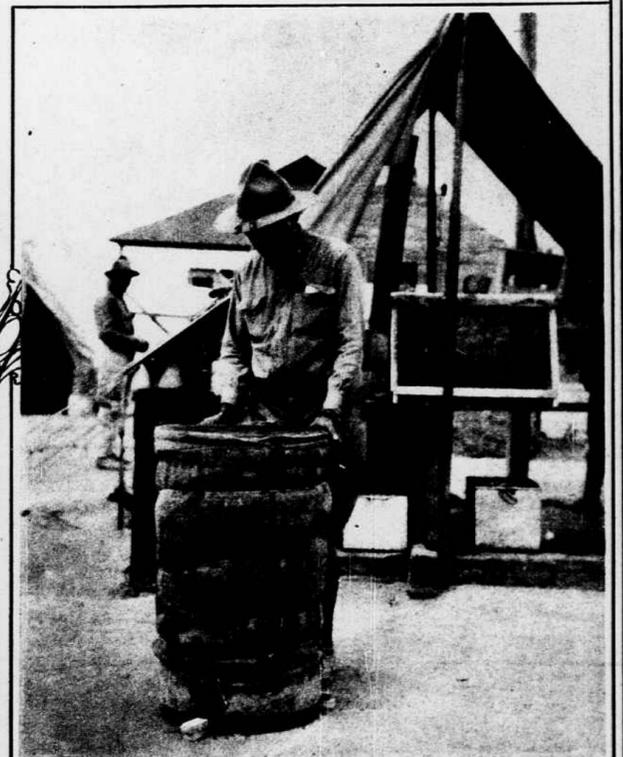

When one of the Signal Corps men thought he saw a snake. It proved to be nothing but a harmless little lizard. The men are ready to bombard the "enemy" with rocks.

Doc McVeigh of Field Hospital at work on a patient. Doc had his head shaved the day this picture was taken.

Lieut. Arthur C. Newman, Battalion Adjutant of 1st Separate, inspecting fly trap made from barrel. This trap is a record-breaker for catches.

Lieut. Russell M. MacLennan of Signal Corps Riding on Top of Box Car.

Pals—Eugene, mascot of 22d Infantry, and Buddie, on backs of burros. They are great favorites with the District of Columbia militiamen.

Doc Amoroso of Field Hospital and his trusty gun. Doc is a great game hunter. Occasionally he gets a rabbit or a quail here.
