CREAM AND SUGAR.

Novelty is the keynote of our modern life. At all events, novelty is what every manufacturer aims for. And as a result the shops are constantly full of new and unusual things. Just now, when winter is closing in, the things pertaining to the coffee pot and tray are especially tempting.

There is a tiny oblong tray, about eight inches long and three or four wide, which holds a coffee service. The tray is of glass, mounted in a silver frame. One end of the tray is marked off with a little silver railing, and black sugar is arranged in this. There is a pair of tongs, shaped like ice picks, for the sugar. The coffee pot and cream jug, in silver, stand on the tray.

A pretty combination cream and sugar outfit shows a rather tall silver cream jug on a round tray with an overreaching handle. Around the base of the cream jug the lumps of sugar are placed and there is a pair of sugar tongs with which to take it.

A convenient little tea strainer has a black wood handle and is so arranged that when it is lifted the little tea beneath it, so catch dripping tea from the leaves, so aside so that it is out of the way.

A pretty little lemon dish is made of engraved glass, lipped in oval fashion. With it there goes a two-pronged little fork of silver.

There are many attractive sugar pitchers of tongs. Some of them are joined, rather than bent, at the top.

For the coffee there is a set of Danish china, cream white with bright blue decorations. There is a slim, tall pot for the coffee, and the small cups are set in silver flagpole holders.

A silver pot is the ideal holder for coffee, after it has been made, for in this sort of pot it keeps hot much longer than it does in a china one, if the pot is heated thoroughly before the coffee is poured in.

Plain American crullers are made like this: They are sometimes erroneously called doughnuts, but doughnuts are in reality raised bread dough cooked in balls in deep fat. Add a cup of shortening. Then add the beaten yolks of two eggs and next the beaten whites. Sift together four cups of sifted flour, half a teaspoonful of salt, a quarter of a teaspoonful of nutmeg and three and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Add, with a cup of milk, to the batter, sugar and eggs. Roll in a sheet half an inch thick on a floured board and cut with floured cutter. Fry brown in deep hot fat and drain thoroughly.

Crullers can be made with buttermilk in this way: Cream a cup of brown sugar and two tablespoonfuls of butter together and add a well beaten egg. Beat and add a cup of buttermilk, and enough next the beaten whites. Sift a teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of baking soda and a teaspoonful of cream tartar to make a stiff dough. Cut and cook in the usual way.

Dishes From the Southland

Of late quite a vogue for southern cooking has sprung up in cities that are far north of the Mason and Dixon line, and where one time baked beans and Boston brown reigned supreme and where buckwheat cakes were served over and brown this side. Cook them long enough to have both sides an even brown and thoroughly cooked through.

Apple Fluff.

Pare and core six apples and fill each center with coconut soaked in milk. Place a bit of butter on top and steam until soft. Remove carefully to a shallow pan, sprinkle with sugar and brown lightly in the oven. Serve hot with whipped cream.

od seven times a week, now the good old beaten biscuits of Dixieland are in demand.

Sift four cups of flour into a basin, add three-fourths teaspoonful of salt, rub six level tablespoonfuls of lard well in with the hands, then add one-half cup of milk and one cup of water, gradually making a stiff dough. Knead thoroughly until dough is perfectly smooth. Turn out on a floured board. Beat continuously for thirty minutes with a rolling pin, folding over the dough as it is flattened out. Roll into a sheet about half an inch thick, cut out with small biscuit cutter, prick thoroughly with a fork three times near the center of the biscuit and bake in a moderate oven for half an hour.

Corn dodgers are not very hard to make when you proceed by pouring two cups of boiling water over two cups of cornmeal, with which has been sifted a quarter of a teaspoonful of salt. See that the meal and water are smoothly mixed, all the lumps broken up, cover the mixing bowl and let it steam for about four minutes. Have ready a hot paniced griddle, which was put on to heat before the bread was started, as this long heating is the necessary point in making your dodgers successful. Drop the mixture by spoonfuls on the griddle, which must be well greased, but it is so that the dough will be about half an inch thick. When the dough is smoking hot dot it with bits of butter, turn
