

Water polo has become one of the popular games of the summer. It is claimed to provide more thrills and breath-taking incidents than land polo. This game was played between girl swimming champions at the close of national swimming contests at Brighton Beach.

Wide World Photo.

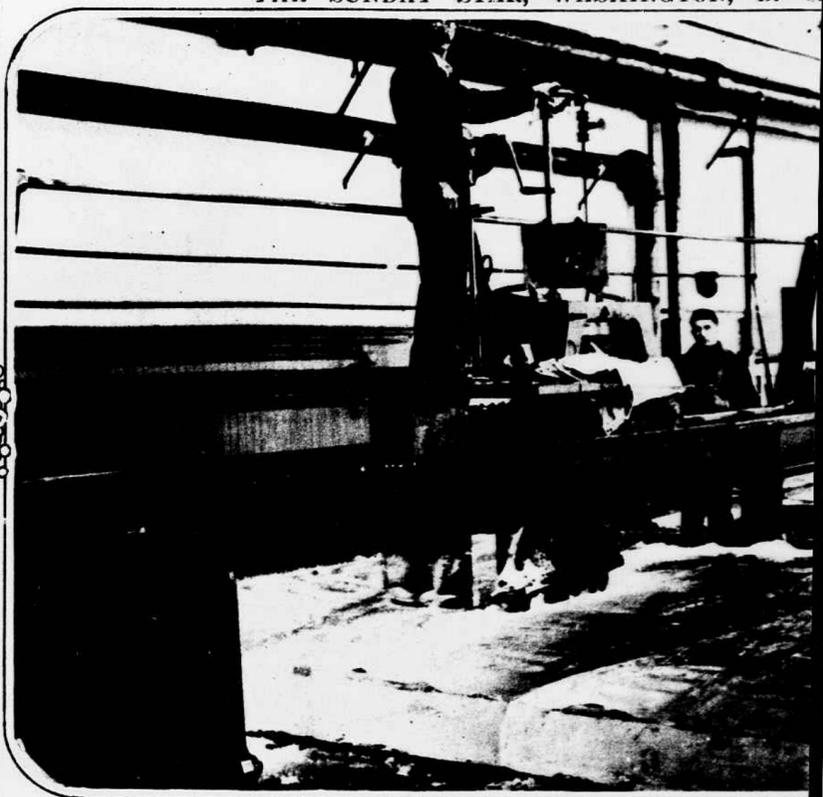

Bruno taking the water cure. During the hot spell, one of the big problems at the local zoo is keeping the polar bears cool. A cold shower given with a strong hose seems to do the trick best. The old fellow is apparently enjoying himself immensely.

National Photo Co.

Don't become startled! Try to get accustomed to this sort of thing gradually, because it may be a common sight along F street within a few short months. This is the latest fad in walking suits in Paris and if it becomes much more popular there it is likely to be taken up in Washington. The outfit is made in cloth and velvet with Louis XIV collars and cuffs.

Wide World Photo.

Manufacturing the stuff that cools the morning coffee and quenches the summer thirst. Yes, it's ice. The great slabs are cut by this gigantic saw, and then loaded on the wagons for transport.

The Coolidge boys, sons of the Vice President, while in Washington. Here they were snapped with German guns outside the Smithsonian Institution.

Rock Creek, that lively little stream which wanders here and there through Rock Creek Park and on to the Potomac, offers many swimming and wading places for the young ones. The "white" water and numerous falls are the rendezvous of youth.

National Photo Co.

Lord Northcliffe (right) and T. Wickham Steed, editor of the London Times, photographed at the White House after calling on President Harding.

Harris & Ewing.

those Mora Sherr