"KEEPING UP WITH THE JONESES" IS KEEPING POP MOMAND BUSY, BUT HE ADMITS HE LIKES IT

BY POP MOMAND.

I gave my first yell in San Diego, Calif., on the night of May 15, 1888. Unlike most native sons, I haven't yelled much about California since. At a very tender age my parents moved to Houston, Tex., where, I understand, my father tried to make some real money in real estate. About the only thing I remember in connection with Houston is getting a licking for running off and hiding on a "flying jenny," which above the Mason and Dixon line is known as a merry-go-round. From Texas my fond parents made a big jump, and the next thing I remember in life is a flock of cable cars, elevated trains and hansom cabs. Also a large quantity of human beings walking up and down a street called Broadway.

Shortly after this my father evidently decided it was time I learned who discovered America and who won the battle of Bull Run, and many other things so necessary to a complete education. So I was sent to school, where I didn't cover myself with much glory, but certainly did cover my books with queer-looking pictures. The family wanted me to become a prominent lawyer, but I fooled 'em, and rapidly became a very poor artist.

When about eighteen I met Harry Grant Dart, then art editor of the New York World, who said if I cared to become a "regular artist" he would give me a job. I jumped at his offer and started on the magnificent salary of $6 per week. He was very kind, and through his efforts and instruction I was soon making $30 per week. For about eight years I did regular newspaper stuff—everything from making borders for photographs to sporting cartoons for the sport page. At last I hit upon "Keeping Up With the Joneses," began to make some "real money," and also began to "keep up with the Joneses" myself.

That was nine years ago, and Aloysius P. McGinis and his family are still going strong.

60,000,000,000 CROWNS NOT ENOUGH FOR AUSTRIA

Printing Presses Speeded Up to Cover Deficit to Meet Demands of Workers.

By Cable to The Star and Chicago Daily News. Copyright, 1921.

VIENNA, September 28.—Austria has almost 60,000,000,000 paper crowns in circulation, but is obliged to speed up the printing presses to cover the deficit and meet the ever-increasing demands of the 500,000 employees in the railroad, post, telegraph and army services. The depreciation of the crown continues in the same proportion as the note issue is augmented, and with each fall in the value of the crown in the world market one sees in Vienna the same scenes of economic and political disturbances. Speculation in money and goods is the only source of revenue of a large number of Viennese, particularly of the immigrants from eastern Europe, for the crown as a medium of exchange is to be held as short a time as possible, or until foreign credits can be purchased. This is harvest time on the exchanges and the latest crisis provoked such popular disapproval that radical agitators were able to organize a siege of the Vienna exchange. The government was obliged to close the exchange upon specified days. Private transactions are continuing, although temporarily business is impeded and demoralized. The railroad strike for more pay in the form of a bonus offers another difficulty for Austria, as the railroads are practically controlled by the employees, who, with their workmen's councils, fix the schedules and rates and maintain the lines on a law operating plane. There is a large surplus of employees who have a tendency to mix in politics.
