

for use until after the highest judicial tribune in Indiana has finally passed on the case.

Attorney Rappaport said this afternoon that he had no idea how long it would be before action would be taken by the state supreme court.

The complicated situation in the Indiana courts respecting the books and documents in the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, held as evidence by the state courts in the dynamiting cases involving John J. and James B. McNamara, was further intensified today when the sheriff failed to obtain the evidence as directed in a replevin proceedings instituted by the iron workers.

Prosecuting Attorney Baker admitted knowing where a part of the alleged evidence was, but Judge Markey notified the sheriff that the articles were not in Baker's possession, but were under the care of the court, although he has entered a record surrendering them to the United States authorities, who desire to make a federal probe of the dynamiting cases. The replevin writ is directed against Baker and two accountants who have been examining the documents.

Attorneys for the iron workers today had placed on record in the criminal court here petitions asking that the petitions of J. Fredericks and the United States, asking for the evidence, be reheard. The court promptly denied the petitions and an appeal bond was filed by the iron workers.

WHO SLEW JOHN RECH'S BABE, RECH OR SOCIETY?

There is food for thought in a story that comes from Santa Barbara, Cal.

John Rech, an Italian gardener who worked for $1 a day, murdered his two-days-old child.

Sheriff Stewart hid near the Rech home, watching for the murderer.

After twelve hours Rech returned from the hills, where he had been in hiding, to bid good-bye to his wife.

Sheriff Stewart arrested him.

As he was led to jail, Rech did not deny his crime. He shrugged his shoulders hopelessly.

"How could I support a wife and baby on a dollar a day?" he asked.

His captors did not answer him. Their duty was to see to it that Rech paid the penalty of his crime.

But how could Rech support a wife and baby on a dollar a day in these times of high cost of living?

And who is to blame for the death of Rech's child.

John Rech,

Or the society that paid him one dollar a day for his labor?

---

Warmer Tomorrow.

Cloudy and unsettled tonight and Sunday; rising temperature. For Chicago and vicinity: Moderate southerly winds.

---

The thermometer is the only thing that's not going up.