

JOHNNY HAYES TELLS HOW HE WON THE OLYMPIC MARATHON RACE AT LONDON IN 1908

Queen Alexandria presenting the Marathon award to Johnny Hayes.

(When Johnny Hayes won the Marathon race in London, at the great Olympic games of 1908, he captured the blue ribbon of the athletic world for the United States. The sensational finish of that race will never be forgotten. Hayes won because he had the speed, courage and stamina. In his own story, the plucky little runner tells The Day-Book readers that he realized his life ambition that day in the stadium. He had trained himself to win this event, from boyhood, and the ability to "stick-to-it" of his younger days stood him in stead when he made his spurt in the London stadium,
