

*****
* SHE WONT WEAR PANTS, SO THERE! *

Rose Eleanor Jewel.
*****

Portland, Ore., Jan. 29.—A preparatory school, then a course in Vassar college, then home life in Portland with her parents, is the program Miss Rose Eleanor Jewel, 16 years, and daughter of Jue Sue,, Chinese aristocrat and one-time Chinese gambling king of the Pacific coast, has mapped out for herself for the next five years. Miss Jewel, whose name in Chinese is Rosa Sue, created consternation among her relatives by running away from a school in Canton because she was forced to wear trousers.

In Shanghai she became engaged to a Chinese mandarin, but when she found that he had another wife she broke the engagement. Miss Jewel says this country is a better place for women than China; that she will never go back to China because she don't want to wear trousers; that she wouldn't marry a Chinese unless he had taken a course through the American universities; that she likes automobiles and theaters.

"China is coming forward every day," she said. "They have lots of schools there and the boys and girls can both go to the same school.

"The boys are allowed to cut their queues and the girls that go to school are called free girls.