

tation to a week-end party at the home of some very wealthy people, a considerably higher grade, financially, than she had been used to mixing with. She was sitting on the piazza of the millionaire's abode, with a number of other persons, including her hostess, and she was trying hard to make herself agreeable, bless her little heart.

She had on a necklace of imitation pearls—the wax variety, very pretty and quite new. Touching them, she asked one of the other women: "How do you like my pearls?"

"Very charming," was the courteous answer.

Then the dear girl noticed that the hostess was wearing a necklace which resembled her's.

"Oh!" she twittered. "Aren't your's lovely! They are the indestructible kind, aren't they?"

(Note, for those who don't know, the indestructible kind is a little more expensive imitation than the common one.)

"Yes, dear," replied the hostess, with just a wee twinkle in her eyes. "And yet I have to be very careful of them. In fact, every time I leave them on my dresser my husband reminds me that I am likel yto lose $35,000 in thirty-five seconds." Of course, it wasn't a bit polite, but it has kept a number of people snickering ever since.

Does college training help a man when he the hard world faces? Big leaguers seem to think it makethem faster on the bases.
