

SURROUNDING HIM

"When a question is up," says nominee Woodrow Wilson, "I listen to all the arguments and then argue it in my own mind."

We imagine that these few words describe Wilson's character pretty thoroughly. And why isn't his plan a pretty good one for all of us who haven't such a big thing as the presidency staring us in the face, but who are apt to decide our little personal propositions on impulse and without analysis of facts and conditions.

It means to hitnik before we act. But most of us pass upon the small details, which really go to make up life, without consideration of circumstances or results. A fellow, maybe a person whom we dearly love, says something that we do not like and we at once try to give him worse than he sent. A business associate seems to take some advantage of us and we resolve to "lay for him" ever after. Things go wrong in our house, and instead of trying to set them right, we storm and cuss. Nothing is much truer than the saying that most of our troubles never happen. Yet, we forget that life is pretty much all contention and that the best way to contend with things or people is with calmness and sense.

The fellow who hears all the arguments, chews them over in his mind and decides as conscience dictates feels satisfied even if he sometimes has to feel uncomfortable.

Undoubtedly candidate Wilson will be surrounded by a lot of big, argumentative gentlemen who know just what they want. He will turn the light of analysis upon their claims and their motives, consult his own heart and head and then decide for himself. He will make mistakes; for the Lord never made a mere man so perfect that he was above making mistakes. But Wilson will know that he decided in accord with what he believed to be the right, and the fellow who does that can afford to let the selfish crowd which surrounds him feel dissatisfied.

MILK FOR BABY.

The "dangerous age" for milk is the time just before it gets sour enough to betray itself to the taste. Milk may thus be palatable and harmless to an adult and very dangerous to an infant.

So see to it that the milk you use for your baby is fresh, not more than a day old at least. Get certified milk if you can and can afford it. Otherwise get the best pasteurized milk you can find. Especial care should be taken in this matter from this time on throughout the summer.

Cost-of-Living Calendar.

Monday—Plenty.

Tuesday—Some.

Wednesday—Little.

Thursday—None.

Friday—Don't worry, for Saturday—Is payday.

Dog days haven't anything to do with "the day every dog shall have."