GRACE TRIAL STARTS.Bulletin.

Grace jury completed.

Atlanta, Ga., July 29.—Her husband, whom she is accused of shooting, lying on a stretcher in a room adjoining the court chamber, a helpless paralytic, Mrs. Daisy Opie Grace today faced the venire from which a jury will be drawn to decide her guilt or innocence.

Mrs. Grace personally supervised the selection of the jury, her attorney, Judge John W. Moore, asking her advice before passing a single man.

Selection of the jurymen was unexpectedly slow. A reluctance to serve was manifest among the veniremen, many of whom declared they had already formed opinions on the case.

Up to the regular time of court recess only a few tentative jurors had been passed and the venire was exhausted. Neither side used any peremptory challenges, indicating that some of the men already selected will be questioned later.

The courtroom was crowded when the case was called. Three-fourths of the spectators were women. With Mrs. Grace was her mother, Mrs. Martha Ulrich, and a nurse.

A sensation was caused at the beginning of the afternoon session when Grace was borne into the courtroom on a stretcher. Mrs. Grace paled as her eyes met her husband's. She quickly averted her gaze and her eyes shifted nervously around the stifling little courtroom chamber. The nurse opened a little handbag, drew out a hypodermic needle and a bottle of pellets, dissolved one of the pills in a glass of water, filled the hypodermic and dragged her chair over toward the defendant. Mrs. Grace bared her arm and the nurse calmly squirted the hypodermic into her flesh.

Mrs. Grace became noticeably quiet.

Grace's cot was located against the railing, immediately at the right of the jury box and within full view of it, as well as of the witness chair.
