

"WEE WILLIE" KEELER, INVENTOR OF SCIENTIFIC BATTING, NOW A WEALTHY RENT-COLLECTOR

Will baseball ever see another
Willie Keeler?

"Wee Willie," the batting marvel of the game; one of the few to get into the .400 class and the only batter that ever played an entire season without fanning?

Today Mr. William H. Keeler of Brooklyn is a real estate broker and apartment house owner, and his heaviest work is

TO DAY, KEELER'S
HEAVIEST WORK IS COLLECTING
HIS RENTS AND BANKING
THE COIN

collecting his rents and banking the money.

Keeler vies with Fjelder Jones, Cy Young and Bill Lang as the richest retired ball player. Any of the four can write his check for more than $100,000—and have it, honored, too.

Last spring Keeler was with Brooklyn, as batting coach, but when the training season ended he returned to that other sport, rent-collecting.

Willie Keeler was one of that