

tel's chances of getting compensation from the store, The Day Book has not published anything about her case since.

But that was forty-two days ago!

And last Sunday, Mrs. Aichel had to be taken to the Presbyterian hospital once more. Her husband was afraid she would die if she were not constantly under the care of physicians and nurses.

And the Aichel family has heard nothing except that one threat about "talking too much" from Siegel, Cooper & Co. And the day she was removed from the Presbyterian hospital the first time because her husband was afraid she was going to die, and if she had to die he wanted her to be in her own home.

It is sixty-three days since that day of horror when the crowded freight elevator crashed down into the pit at the Siegel, Cooper & Co. store.

It is sixty-three days since the ambulances clattered into the Siegel-Cooper alley and the victims were carried out of the store amid the screams of horror-stricken women.

Since that day, Mrs. Aichel never has left her bed, save to be taken to the hospital or from the hospital.

Her condition now is very serious. The doctors are puzzled by her case. They do not know just what is the matter. They do know that something is seriously wrong with her spine, and there is some other internal trouble which they cannot diagnose.

And Siegel, Cooper & Co., secure in their knowledge that the news of the accident was suppressed in every newspaper but The Day Book, and that there is no police record of it, seem to be paying no attention to the case.

ARREST MRS PANKHURST FOR BLAST OUTRAGE

London, Feb. 24.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of the militant suffragettes, was arrested on the London Pavilion lecture platform this afternoon and formally charged with inciting the Lloyd George country home at Walton-on-Hill and other suffragette outrages.

The evidence against her is a stenographic report of her speech at Cardiff, Wales, immediately after the blowing up of the chancellor of the exchequer's home. In the speech, Mrs. Pankhurst claimed all credit for the dynamiting of Walton-on-Hill and assumed all responsibility.

Mrs. Mary Desmond, a poorly dressed woman, carrying a baby in her arms, was fined $2.50 in Bow street court today for smashing the glass panel in the Admiralty. The magistrate gasped when Mrs. Desmond indignantly denied she was a suffragette.

"I do not want the ballot," she cried. "I broke that glass as a protest against the transfer of warship-building from the Thames to the north. It threw my husband out of work, and my children and the children of many others are starving."
