

PRAISING OF JUDGE COOPER CAUSES NEAR
RIOT AT WOMAN'S CIVIC COUNCIL MEETING

THE DAY BOOK

An Adless Daily Newspaper.

N. D. Cochran,
Editor and Publisher.

500 South Peoria St.
Tel. Monroe 353.

VOL. 2, NO. 228. Chicago, Wednesday, June 25, 1913 ONE CENT

GIRL WHO "WENT THE PACE" WARNS OF THE PITFALLS OF SLAVERS

*Tells How Young Girls Are Trapped—Evelyn Nesbitt, Eighteen, Tells of the Experiences That Led
Her to the Juvenile Home.*

In presenting this, the first of ten articles, The Day Book is giving to its readers one of the most remarkable series ever published.

It is the setting down of facts learned by a girl who, although barely 18 years old, is world-wise and intimately acquainted with the night life of many cities.

Evelyn Nesbitt knows intimately of the night life, its pleasures and its sorrows; she has been pursued by white slavers and knows how they work to entice girls into lives of shame. At present she is a prisoner of the Juvenile Court in Los Angeles, where she is being held as an important witness in the vice investigation now on there which has involved many prominent and highly respected men.

In publishing this series The Day Book is not doing so with the idea of furnishing "spicy" reading. It has a far more serious motive in view—a desire to point out to parents the pitfalls which surround their children so that YOUR son or YOUR daughter may not be a victim. The articles will appear from day to day. The first one follows.—Editor.

BY EVELYN NESBITT

Chapter I.

I'm married. My husband is in New York now, and that's where I came from originally.

It seems a long time since we were married, but it can't be so very long, because I'm just 18. I am now locked up a prisoner of the Juvenile Court.

I always got along pretty well in New York before we were married.