

Lord Dallyrot in Stangland

One day I entered a tobacconist's establishment and ascertained the variety of his stock of cigars, you know. In selecting one I specified that I did not care for a strong, black one, but preferred the milder sort. He said:

"I'm on, bo, I'm on. You ain't seeking to inhale a roundhouse. Nix on those husky, Zulu-tinted torches, eh cul? Here's what'll tickle your pipes—a nice, mild, tan-colored Roman candle, the kind we call the Flor de Manila Hemp."

My word!

PROBABLY COMPLETE DIGGS JURY THIS AFTERNOON

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 7.—Expected that the jury in the Maury I. Diggs white slave case will be finished this afternoon. The entire morning was devoted to the examination of talesmen and the peremptory challenges were almost exhausted.

The only enlivening incident of the morning was the attempt to prevent Photographer Larkin from taking photographs for The Day Book. After Larkin had taken the picture, Judge Van Fleet warned him. The defense attorney demanded that the plates be confiscated, but the judge said that anything taken by a photographer was his personal property.

Judge Van Fleet is determined there shall be no unnecessary delay and is hustling things along and suppressing sensationalism as much as possible.

It is clear there will be sensations in plenty when Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris go on the stand and tell about their trip to Reno with Diggs and Caminetti.

Prosecutor Sullivan says if the defense tries to break down the character of the girls it will revolt any honest juror.

The American abroad does not lose his head easily. An Italian showed a Yankee tourist Vesuvius in eruption, and thought surely that must stir his awe. But the American, after gazing for a moment at the burning mountain, said: "We've got a waterfall in America that would put that out in five minutes."

Asphalt was known to the ancients and is said to have been employed as a binder in masonry by the Babylonians.
