

THREE LAWYERS INDICTED ON BLACKMAIL CHARGE

Omaha, Neb., March 12.—Three prominent attorneys who have represented Mrs. Nellie Risley Paul in various legal proceedings against Arthur D. Brandeis, millionaire department store proprietor, have been indicted by the grand jury on charge of blackmail.

Irving F. Baxter, formerly judge of the district court is charged with extorting $7,500 from Brandeis by threatening to expose certain charges made by Mrs. Paul that Brandeis had improper relations with her young son, Clarence Risley, an amateur actor.

R. H. Olmsted, attorney, is charged with blackmail in connection with later payment of $30,000 made by Brandeis to obtain silence.

T. E. Brady, who recently represented Mrs. Paul in a $250,000 damage suit against Brandeis is indicted in connection with the suit. The jury found for Brandeis, but added to its finding that Mrs. Paul had already been compensated for all damages.

Three other lawyers have been indicted on charges of embezzlement and subordination of perjury.

MINISTERS ASKED TO PREACH ONE-DAY-REST SERMON

Every minister in the city of Chicago has been asked by the Women's Trade Union League to preach a sermon next Sunday that the good old Biblical law of one-day rest in seven be applied to the working women of Chicago.

In the letter the league explained how the strike of the Henrieli waitresses was called because they wanted $8 for six days work rather than $7 for seven days.

"The most distinctive creation of the church in the economic life of mankind is the one-day rest in seven," the letter reads. "A working week of seven days is, or ought to be, out of place in a Christian civilization. It is survival of Paganism and a direct challenge of the powers of the church.

"Of all our institutions, the church naturally is the most concerned in this issue now confronting our public and affecting our workers.

"The numerous unjust arrests and the brutality of the police towards the waitresses have so taken the attention of the people that the great issue in this controversy, the one-day rest in seven, is lost sight of."

AFTER THREE YEARS' BATTLE THEY GET $75 EACH

New York, March 12.—After a legal battle of nearly three years, administrators of the estates of 23 of the victims burned to death in the Triangle shirtwaist factory fire, where doors were locked so that employees could not escape, settled on the basis of $75 each.

These amounts will not be paid by Harris & Blanck, proprietors of the factory, or Joseph E. Asch, owner of the building in which 148 employees were burned to death, but by an employers' liability company.

"Look, Jimmy, there's a messenger boy runnin'!"

"Shucks, you're easy. That ain't no messenger boy; that's a movin' picture actor."
