THE MAGNATE TO HIS LAWYER

By Fullerton

Oh, quote me a law of the things that
I can
And the things that they cannot do,
A law that only applies to them
And never to me or you.
Oh, read me again from that dear old case
Of Dubinski versus MacHales,
Where the court decided Dubinski
could jump
Because of dirt under Mac's fingernails.
Oh, cite me the case of Larry
O'Rourke,
Who wanted ten thousand from me.
Read only the case I want to hear—
And add eighty bucks to your fee.

Jack Johnson can stop Jess Willard in any round he chooses, according to Dan McKetrick, who traveled with the big black on the continent for some time last summer.

"In the Moran bout," said McKetrick today, "Jack stalled quite a bit and experts had it figured the champion was about through. He isn't. I know. He was so afraid that he was going to be tricked out of his title in the Moran affair that he wouldn't fight after the third round, but just stood off and jabbed his man silly rather than run the risk of losing his crown through some technicality."
