So certain is officialdom that the conflict cannot long be postponed that the Austrian ambassador has wired his brother to prepare his Insbruch villa for his occupancy.

The frontier is a scene of activity. Military preparations are feverishly proceeding.

London.—From a point near the sea in Belgium to the vicinity of Lille the British troops are forcing the German entrenched line back. The center of the attack is to the east of Ypres and the main strength of the British force is believed here to extend northward beyond Pilken.

While the British are forcing the fighting on the extreme northwest of the long battle line, the French are also very active at the other extremity, in Alsace, where the drive toward the Rhine is gaining impetus every day.
