

FOLK WHO WRITE AND DRAW FOR MAGAZINES STARS IN LATEST SILHOUETTE MOVIE

New York, Feb. 15.—There's something new under the sun, or rather behind the spotlight—the silhouette movie. It has darkened the lives not only of some movie actors, but of Irvin Cobb, Owen and Mrs. Johnson, James Montgomery and Mrs. Flagg, Charles Dana and Mrs. Gibson, Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo Selwyn, May Wilson Preston and her husband James, and, among others, Inbad the Sailor, hero of the first silhouette movie.

The inventors, C. Allan Gilbert, illustrator, and J. H. Bray, cartoonist, induced these notables to go into the movies when they were lured to the Gilbert-Bray studio.

There the authors and artists and their wives or husbands, moving in profile across the stage, were thrown into bold relief against a white background, and their movements recorded by a motion picture camera.

Author Cobb acted a brief skit, entitled "Preparedness," with the aid of a toy gun, an American flag and his vast proportions.

Illustrator Flagg acted Flagg the Harlequin, since his costume was for something besides exposing his flag-staff figure.
