

tracted him as a magnet. Blood found its own!

"Red" leaped from his seat and confronted the pair. He saw the amazed recognition flame into "Father's" face. "Red" raised one wrist, the muscles hard as steel. "Father" winced. He dodged the blow.

But the blow did not fall. "Father" was an old man and "Red" was too happy to find the boy, to see him standing before him, alarm on his face, wonder, stupefaction in his eyes.

"Red" linked his arm through the lad's and led him from the restaurant unresisting. At the door, however, the boy stopped and freed himself.

"You are—you are—" he stammered.

"Your father," said "Red" softly. "And God sent me to you at just the instant, Jimmy. You're coming home with me now, and—and I guess we'll run straight together."

THIS COLLAR IS MIGHTY SMART!

By Betty Brown.

What's a tailored suit without a tailored collar! Indeed, some of the new collars are so pretty they really make the suit. Here's an odd one in brick-red Georgette crepe with tiny piping of self-colored satin and stitchings of brick red to give it a truly tailored effect.

HAS 13 NAMES — WHAT WOULD KIDS CALL HIM IN A BALL GAME.

PRINCE ALPHONSO

He looks like an American boy, a lad who could play a pretty hot game of baseball, but listen to his name—Infant Alphonse Pie Christian Edouard Francois Guillaume Charles Henri Eugene Fernand Antonie Venancio. He is the future king of Spain and on May 10 will celebrate his ninth birthday in the royal palace at Madrid.
