

SALT LAKERS IN GOTHAM.

The Advent of Lent and the "Terrible" Sacrifices It Entails—Misunderstanding of "The Resurrection"—Story of Tolstoy's Thrilling Play.

Special Correspondence.

New York, March 3.—At Proctor's Fifth Avenue theater on Broadway, next Sunday evening, Miss Lisle Leitch gives a trial performance of her playlet, the "Butterfly and the Bee," the sketch written for her by Edward Elmer, the playwright, and for which she pays $1,000. Mr. Elmer is under contract to the Theatrical Syndicate for a period of five years, trying controlling all his writings and plays during that time. He has just finished dramatizing "Graustark," which will be brought out by Mary Manning next season, and there has been a faint rumor that his "Paul and Virginia," to which he is giving the last touches of his clever hand, may be added to Maude Adams' repertoire next year, though DeLoach has also been negotiating for it. Mr. Elmer has under consideration another play for Miss Leigh for the future.

At the residence of Colonel Willard Young last Wednesday, Feb. 25, his eldest daughter, Hattie, had a birthday, and very charmingly it was celebrated, many of her young friends being present, and all participating in a guessing contest of the popular plays now running in New York. The prizes were won by Miss Rebecca Morris and Mr. Gill Richards. Many laughable guesses were made by all present; most delicious refreshments were served, and the evening was a delightful affair for all invited. Among those present were: President Arthur Wellington, Elders Taylor, Knowlton and Woods, the Messes Afton and Jasmine Young, Miss Rebecca Morris, Misses Lulu Gates and Edna Bailey, Ralph Richards, John Sharp, Gill Richards and Arthur Murphy.

Mr. George Savage of the well known house of C. R. Savage, arrived in New York from Boston a few days ago. Mr. Savage has been in the east some time, making purchases for his firm. Chicago has claimed a good share of his time, and Boston also has received a portion. He is located at the Grand, on Broadway. There are other Salt Lakers to be found at the different hotels—S. Murray at the Grand Union, A. H. Boxwell at the Imperial, H. C. Gaw at the Victoria, B. Steinman at the Everett House, Allen L. Hill and J. E. Howland at the Grand, H. N. Rogers at the Continental, and J. E. Gallagher at the Herald Square. Mr. Schaufelberger of Walker Bros. is registered at the Holland.

Mr. Howard Kyle, so well remembered in Salt Lake for his excellent work in the stock company at the Grand, and later for his Nathan Hale, came into New York this week from his road tour, where he has been giving that play to good business. He will take a week's vacation before going out again. He is staying at his mother's, Mrs. Vandergriff's on Eighty-second street.

Lent is again with us, and for many, it proves a most desirable event. It is a beautiful time of the year, and a lovely time to visit the different churches. Naturally, there are funny sides to this beautiful observance of the custom. One family—well known in our colony—determined upon making some sacrifice, and each member held before his or her conscience, one particular fault, or one special desire they felt themselves unable to do without, and all bravely declared they would overcome the weakness and deny their appetites for a season at last. One agreed not to talk so much as she was in the habit of doing, but after a moment's consideration decided she could not do that, and a coffee cake next in day's affections, she made a vow to stop drinking that for a time. Another decided to stop eating candy, but she was found next day emptying the sugar bowl of all the cut sugar. The many questions the family found themselves in for a few days were laughable in the extreme.

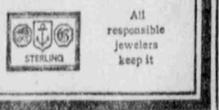

It is well to note that the members of the colony who have been afflicted with grippe so many weeks, are all on the road to recovery, most of them being able to be around. Miss Perrin, who was very ill for a time, has entirely recovered, and will resume her lessons the coming week.

At the Professional Woman's league last Monday, Mrs. Alphonse Fidler was made a member of that organization. Mrs. Fidler's husband is now playing the title role in O. U. Bean's "Corianton," and she was at one time a well known Salt Laker; her father Mr. Thomas F. O'Malley, was head of an amusement company that played through Utah from north to south. As Anna O'Malley she will be remembered for her excellent harp music and clever acting. Her father is now on the road with the "Ragged Dicks" company and her sister Gertrude is with the "Old Crossroads" company. Mrs. Fidler is living with her mother at Sheepshead Bay. She has a bright little boy of four years. Her recollections of Salt Lake are among the pleasantest she can recall in life, and her mother shares her feelings in this regard.

A great deal of misunderstanding exists regarding the plot of "The Resurrection," the play in which Blanche Walsh and Joseph Hawthorn are now attracting so much attention. Many people think from the title, that it is a religious or a Biblical drama. Nothing could be farther from the facts. Here is the story:

Dimitri Ivanovitch, who belongs to one of the titled families of Russia, one of the sons of a romantic, though pure and innocent attachment for one of the dependents of the household, a young and beautiful girl, named Katusha, an orphan who has been adopted by his aunts and reared more in the capacity of a companion than a servant. Dimitri leaves for the army, and while he does not forget his little Katusha he loses the freshness of youth. On his return for a brief visit, which is the point at which the play begins, he finds Katusha has improved in all those ways which flatter a man's vanity. She is more affectionate, is prettier and more bashful. He takes up his wooing again, but this time it is of a sensual nature. His elation motives are not understood by the frightened and innocent Katusha until too late. As a conscience offering he leaves her a hundred ruble note, and almost immediately rejoins his regiment. It is many years before he again sees his people and the ever-changing conditions of his career soon blot out recollections of little Katusha.

Ten years later, after his retirement from the army, he is called for jury duty, the first case on the calendar being that of a dissolute woman named Maslova, who is charged with murder. To his consternation and shame he recognizes in the accused the sweetheart of his youth. He had learned from his aunts years since an account of her having fallen from grace; that she had been put out of the house and that subsequently she had given birth to a child. But now it was different. He was brought face to face with his victim, and the awful change that had come over her since he had seen her last—then in the first blush of youthful and innocent maturity, now bearing a name even the utterance of which is regarded as profanity—brings his crime home to him with terrible force. He is struck to the very soul and realizes that it is he and not she who should be before the bar of justice, no matter what deed she had committed. He listens to the evidence which shows that the woman, though an innocent accomplice, is not guilty of the crime with which she is charged. Through the incompetence of the jury and the carelessness of the judge in his summing up, Dimitri suffers the agony of hearing her convicted and sentenced to hard labor in Siberia. He sees nothing now in his life's future but to try and save this woman. He succeeds in gaining an interview with her in prison, and it is only after he has compelled her to recall the past that she finally recognizes him. She tells him to go back whence he came; asks him in a semi-drunken delirium why he did not speak before it was too late; why he did not publicly stand up for her in court; reminds him that he bought her, and that her price was a hundred rubles. He begs her forgiveness, admits that he is the guilty one, offers any reparation, even marriage, but she will not listen. Nothing daunted, however, he swears to devote his life to her redemption. He engages famous counsel to plead for a new trial, and interviews every one of any influence who is likely to help in bringing about her pardon or a mitigation of her sentence. The return of Dimitri into her life has its salutary effect upon "Katusha" or "Maslova," as she is now known, and with each of his visits, in which he makes every appeal to the slumbering soul within her, a noticeable improvement is seen in her appearance and conduct. When she leaves with the company of prisoners for Siberia, Dimitri follows and among other things succeeds in having her employed as a nurse in the infirmary.

MILES TO REPORT HIS TRAVELS.

Major General Nelson A. Miles, head of the United States army, is preparing a lengthy report of his tour of the world, which will be officially presented to the secretary of war. The report is expected to prove of unusual interest. General Miles and his wife were showered with marked attention at the various cities they visited.

Boys don't care. They only think of today. It's the parents who must watch and worry. They know what exposure to the wet and cold means—tender throats, sore lungs, hard coughs. That's why so many homes keep on hand
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral
Just a single dose, when the cold first comes on, is often sufficient. Your own doctor will explain why this medicine is so good for coughs of all kinds, for bronchitis, and even for consumption.

In the winter, when the children take cold so easily, I always keep Ayer's Cherry Pectoral on hand. It is a wonderful medicine for throat and lung troubles.
Mrs. SOPHIA KRIBTER, Brooklyn, N. Y.

An incident occurs here discouraging enough for Dimitri. Maslova's attractiveness subjects her to the continual insults of the men around her, revolting to her now, for sensual love has become loathsome. One brute in particular tries to force his attentions upon her, and she strikes him. The action is seen by the superintendent, who enters at this juncture, accompanied by Dimitri. Her assailant defends himself by swearing he was importuned by Maslova and that he is not the only man with whom she has tried to carry on. Maslova sees the look of disgust on Dimitri's face and is too proud and humiliated even to speak in her own defense. Later on, when her redemption is complete, or rather the resurrection of her soul has taken place, he learns the truth of the incident. Her pardon arrives and again he offers to marry her, but her nobility will not allow him to make what she deems would be an unjustifiable sacrifice, and she tells him no; that she will marry Simonson, a political prisoner, not because she loves the latter, but because he is a good man, loves her with an honest love and that with his assistance she may perhaps work the resurrection of other women of the streets, that the rest of her life may be devoted to helping her fallen or unfortunate fellow creatures.
JANET.
LONDON.
During the nineteenth century London grew at nearly a constant pace from 800,000 people to 6,200,000—eightfold. New York grew more rapidly but less regularly, in general doubling in about 20 years. During the century it developed from a town of 60,000 people to a great city of 3,200,000, thus increasing 53 fold.
With the rate of increase in both cities slightly slower than it has averaged for a century, New York is still growing twice as fast as London. New York is growing 33 per cent in 10 years; London, 17 per cent. If this rate of increase remains constant for half a century, New York will have 10,000,000 people, and London 14,270,000—Maritime World.
