The yards of the breeders are now full of young and old birds, and they are anxious to dispose of them. In many cases roosters which have all the breeders' best eggs set from under their wings, and which are of the standard, may often be bought cheap.

HOW GOOD PEACHES ARE GROWN

The subject of growing good peaches that will bring fancy prices in the market is one which ultimately concerns all who are in the business of growing this fruit.

There are many who think they are in the peach business, but who in reality are in the seed business. They grow far too large a proportion of peach seeds and far too little of the valuable part—the delicate flesh which surrounds the seeds.

This is the only part that brings the returns when the fruit is sold or that is valuable when used at home.

Prof. H. E. Van Deman tells in the Fruit Growers' Journal how to grow good peaches. In the first place, he says, the climate must be suitable and the soil must be good.

A path or light or slightly sandy soil is better than very stiff clay. Indeed, some very sandy lands are sometimes well adapted to produce very good peach crops.

As to the distance apart to set the trees, the old plan was to give them an abundance of room. They allowed them to spread almost at will. In rich soil they were now too far apart at 20 to 25 feet under this method.

But experience has taught the fruit growers a much better way. The trees are set as close as 12 to 15 feet in rather thin land, and from 15 to 20 feet in now considered ample.

Distance of the trees apart is allowed to grow to be tall and with long branches the fruit is hard to gather and the trees are apt to break down by the weight of their own branches.

Spraying and thinning are also more difficult than on smaller trees. The peach trees that are pruned back so severely that the fruit can be gathered without a ladder of any kind is getting to be one that is liked best because it pays best.

Thinning the fruit when it is about the size of peach seeds is getting to be almost universal with good peach growers. The prevalent idea is to grow as small a number of peaches on little not compelled to adopt such business methods, says a writer in Drovers' Journal. The stock should be bought from yards as close as possible to the place where they are to be raised, not only on account of the saving in express charges, but also from the fact that climatic influences affect poultry as well as other stock, and birds from one extreme do not thrive as well as those which were raised in a climate similar to the one which they are shipped to.

Some time after he returned to Princeton, he related an incident that happened on a train on which he was riding in the West. The train was a slow one that ran twice a week between two small stations. He boarded it with two companions, and left an hour after starting, it entered a black tunnel. A man seated across the aisle asked the conductor how long it would take to pass through the tunnel.

"Oh, about two hours," the conductor snapped, and hurried through the car.

The man opposite him, looking at his grip, soon seemed to be struggling with something in the darkness. Suddenly the car was illuminated with a glaring sunlight, for the train had emerged from the tunnel. All eyes turned towards the man opposite. The two hours of darkness promised him by the conductor he had begun to see things in a different way.

He now sat, his coat, necktie and collar thrown over the next seat, as noted from the waist up as a man about to take a bath.

TWO SURPRISES.

A young lady surprised her intended with a beautifully worked pair of slippers, and he acknowledged the present by sending her his picture, incased in a handsome frame. He wrote a note to send with it, and at the same time replied angrily to an old-fashioned letter for an up-to-date suit of clothes.

He engaged a boy to deliver the package and note. The young lady received a note in her adored one's handwriting, and flew to her room to devour its contents. She opened the device with eager fingers and read:

"I am getting tired of your everlasting attentions. I never amounted to much anyway. Please go to Jericho!"

And the tailor was struck utterly dumb when he opened a parcel and discovered the portrait of his delinquent customer, with a note that said:

"When you gaze upon my features, think how much I owe you."

When the unfortunate young man called that evening to receive the happy acknowledgment of his sweetheart he was very quickly shown off the door-step by the young lady's father—Chicago Journal.
