GREENWICH INSURANCE COMPANY QUILTS.

As a result of losses sustained in the great Baltimore fire the Greenwich Insurance company will retire from business and its affairs will be liquidated, says the New York Herald. Its business will be taken over by the Commercial Union Assurance company of London, England. Organized in 1834, and consequently one of the oldest fire insurance companies on the continent, the Greenwich company has long been one of the biggest factors in the fire risk business in the entire country. Following the investigation of the losses sustained in the Baltimore fire, negotiations were begun with a view to transferring the risks, and within the last few days a contract was closed with the Commercial Union by which that company reinsures all outstanding contracts of the old Greenwich company. This was done with the approval of its president, Mason A. Stone, and it is stated that the stockholders will receive in liquidation more than double the recent market value of the company's stock. The losses sustained in the Baltimore fire have been found to be little more than $200,000, an amount slightly in excess of the capital stock of the Greenwich company. This development, it was found, would necessitate some capital adjustment which might involve an assessment. The proposition from the Commercial Union was favorably entertained and the deal was finally put through. The broker in the negotiations was Sumner Ballard. One remarkable feature which came out in the examination of the Greenwich risks was the fact that the first policy of the company, issued on Jan. 1, 1834, has never lapsed, and the risk is now taken over by the London concern. The policy was on a house in Perry street owned by Clinton Gilbert, a financier of that day. The Greenwich company has had a successful career, as is testified by its dividend record. Never since its organization has it failed to pay annual dividends, once reaching the big sum of 55 per cent and more than once 40 per cent. Since 1834 its dividends have averaged 18 per cent. Mason A. Stone, the president of the Greenwich company, began his business career in its service as a clerk in 1835 upon his return from the Civil war. He was gradually promoted until in 1872 he was appointed secretary of the company. Although well advanced in years, he was a most indefatigable worker, frequently remaining at his office until 9 o'clock at night. The local agents of the Greenwich Insurance company, Messrs. McCormick, Cooke & Co., confirm the report of the company's retiring from business, but say it will cut no figure with local policyholders, as all its business was reinsured in the Commercial Union. It is expected that policyholders will receive notice to this effect soon.
