A SHORTLY PUBLISHED STATEMAN.

A Washington City dispatch reports an interview with Representative Sayers, of Texas, who is a prominent member of the appropriation committee in the Fifty-first congress.

Apparently the gentleman from Texas considers this one of those obviously meritorious programs that will slip through, as though on greased ways, by the mere force of gravitation.

But though the enthusiastic Texas seems to have been oblivious of the fact, there are breakers ahead. To talk about cutting down appropriations en masse, or as an abstract proposition, is quite different from cutting down in detail.

And as to the prompt passage of a bill for the free coinage of silver, Mr. Sayers seems to have said his eyes tightly to the indubitable fact that this is and has been long a party that a national issue.

In respect to the immediate passage of a tariff bill "which will give the relief the people demand," Mr. Sayers talks no more glibly than did some Republicans at the opening of the present congress.

The "demands of the people," broadly considered, as expressed in the last presidential election, have been fully and admirably complied with in the McKinley bill.

undisputed. That is for each party to select from the two contending organizations sixteen Republicans and an equal number of Democrats whose rights are unquestioned, and that these to the exclusion of all others constitute the lower house; drawing lots for the Speakership and alternating as to other offices.

Whether this would prove an effective remedy is open to doubt. As there are others equally entitled to seats as would be the thirty-two thus selected, it is certain that they could not be lawfully thrown out without their consent, and doubtful whether they would have the right of their own volition to deprive their constituents of representation.

It would appear more rational, and decidedly better policy, for the Republicans to throw upon the Democratic Senate the onus of non-legislation and of blocking the wheels of government.

By an interesting contribution on "Love to Canada" in the November Overland Monthly, John S. Hittell has supplemented his handsome tribute to the resources, advantages, growth and enterprise of the new northwest in a former issue of the same magazine.

Noting the significant fact not sufficiently appreciated by many of our people and some of our statesmen, that ours has been the first of Christian nations to disavow the policy of conquest and "the first to make purchase and friendly annexation the means of acquiring territory," he takes a comprehensive view of the acquisitions in this manner by which between 1803 and 1877 our original area of 800,000 square miles was extended to include an area of 3,600,000 square miles.

This unexampled series of territorial acquisitions is attributed to "the vigorous expansive force of American policy, industry and population, when brought into contact with the savagism of the red men and the torpid civilization of the Spanish in Florida, the French in Louisiana, or the Mexicans in Texas and California."

And then comes the question, "Has our Union now reached the limit of her growth? Shall this generation despair of adding to the national domain, after our fathers and grandfathers achieved such magnificent results with means so vastly inferior?"

Geographical, trade and industrial considerations are combined with homogeneity and the strategic features of the situation to sustain an argument in favor of rounding off our acquisitions by the annexation of Canada.

attaches to the idea of vast territorial expansion, viewing the question as one affecting our own business interests, there is a large fraction of our country to which the annexation of Canada would be no advantage, but the reverse. If we must extend, at present our self-interest points in another direction.

The whole trouble with the legislative apportionment is that the state was apportioned in strict accord with the census figures and not as Breckinridge would like to have it. Hereafter the Breckinridge will be considered in such matters.

THE CALKINS FALSHOOD-BROKERS. Their Last Lie Was Killed as Soon as It Showed Its Head. We call public attention to the Calkins gang's latest falsehood, mailed to the wall by the hammer of truth.

By a choice between Squire and Calkins, in the Herald's opinion, simply a choice between two evils, a choice the respectable Democratic minority should see is not forced upon the people, by compelling the Republicans to select a third man, and one fitted to properly represent the state of Washington.

Those handsome Overcoats at Hyams, Pauson & Co., 800-802-804 Front street—nobody imagines they are ready-made—nobody. Of course those who buy them know. Nobody else. Once outside of our store the tailors are likelier to get the credit for them than we. Ask the best dressed men along the street. You'll find four out of five got theirs here. We don't like the missing of getting the credit. Of course not. But, there's another side to our business than glory. We're sure of all the cash, and we do get a share of the glory.

Pay fair for the best. They're worth it. Don't pay too dear—that's all. You'll not with us.
