"HERE GOES NOTHING"

But Its Departure Was Indefinitely Postponed.

A LOAFER'S BLUFF AT SUICIDE.

He Got Credit With Saloonkeepers on Strength of an Imaginary Fortune and Took Champagne.

"Here goes for nothing," was the remark made by George W. Campbell, a frequenter of the Drum saloon, in that place yesterday morning, and the next instant his hat went flying through the air in a cloud of smoke from a Smith & Wesson revolver. Campbell's intention to end his life was good, but his execution was poor and he lives to make a more successful attempt another day.

Campbell has been hanging around the Drum saloon for some time past and drinking whenever he could "stand off" the barkeeper. His credit in the house was good because of a representation that he had been left a legacy of $4,000 by a relative in England, and he ran up an account amounting to about $2. The Drum is kept by the Zbindler Brothers and Frank Hottel, who also own the saloon on the corner of Front and Bell streets, and of course Campbell was well acquainted with all three of the proprietors.

On Friday night about 9 o'clock Arnold Zbindler, who attends to the business of the saloon on Front and Bell streets, answered a call in one of the back rooms and found Campbell and a woman there. Campbell called for a bottle of Pommeury and made out a check in the name of Horton bank for $10 and asked to be paid the change. $7.50, in money, saying he had received his money, and told Zbindler that he would have no trouble in collecting it. Yesterday morning he turned up in the Drum saloon and asked the barkeeper to let him see Hottel's gun, as he thought of buying it. The shells were taken out and the gun handed to him. He looked at it a second and handed it back, saying he would think it over.

When Hottel came on watch, Campbell asked to see the gun again, saying he wanted to buy it. Hottel said it was not for sale, but handed it to Campbell to look at. He turned it around in his hand a few times, and holding it to his head said: "Well, here goes for nothing," and fired. The ball entered his hat at the sweat band and came out at the top. The men in the saloon were frightened out of their wits and expected to pick up a dead man. In this they were disappointed and Campbell came up smiling with only a powder burn on the side of his head and a perforated bonnet. He laid the gun down on the counter, picked up his hat and quietly walked out.

He went straight to the saloon on Front and Bell and asked Zbindler for two bottles of beer and $2 in money. He was given the beer but refused the coin. He grew very indignant when refused the money and said he did not like to be doubted. In the meantime an employee of the Drum came up and told Zbindler that Campbell had no money in the bank at all. When the waiter heard this he walked out and Zbindler went after him. He was caught on Second street and came back to the saloon, but refused to go with Zbindler to the bank. He ran down to the cabin on the water front.

Zbindler located him and telephoned to police headquarters for an officer. Detective Williams was detailed on the case.

NORTH BEND STRICKEN.

Fire Destroys Half the Business Portion of the Town.

Over one-half the business portion of the town of North Bend, located in the eastern part of King county, on the Lake Shore railroad, was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning, and had it not been for the fact that there was not a breath of air stirring the entire town would undoubtedly have been laid in ashes. The total loss will be between $2,000 and $3,000, and so far as can be learned the insurance will fall far below those figures.

North Bend consists entirely of wooden buildings. The main street runs north from the Lake Shore depot and the business portion of the town commences about a block from that point. On the left hand side of the street was Weeks' store, in which are the Lake Shore ticket office, notwithstanding there is a depot, and the postoffice. Connected with this store is Gustin's hotel where all Seattle fishermen take their dinner when on the way up the Snoqualmie. Across the street from Weeks' store and the hotel was a row of one-story wooden buildings, the most northerly of which was owned by ex-County Commissioner William H. Taylor and formerly used as a saloon. Of late it has been occupied partly as a residence by Dr. Brown and partly as a store room by Mr. Taylor. Mr. Taylor intended to open a store there and recently ordered a stock of goods, which arrived at North Bend but which fortunately had not been placed in the building when the fire took place.

About 1 o'clock yesterday morning the town was aroused by the cry of fire, and when the startled people came tumbling out of bed they saw long tongues of flames shooting up into the air and could hear the cracking as the walls and floors in Taylor's building went up in fire. When discovered, the flames had complete control of the first building and it was apparent that with the limited means at hand for fighting fire the people of North Bend could do no more than turn their attention to saving other property. Bucket brigades were formed, and while the flames went merrily on like so many demons the good people worked to save as much property as possible.

A house fifty feet north of Taylor's place was saved from the fire, but William Holbrook's dwelling, next south of Taylor's, went like tinder. A moment later the fiery elements jumped a narrow lot and continued their course of destruction to Herman Patyold's house, which was saved. Next came another large building owned by Mr. Holbrook and used in part as a shoe shop. As this building was rapidly consumed, the heat became intense and great fears were entertained for the safety of Weeks' store and Gustin's hotel. Despite the fact that water, as much as could be obtained, was turned on the latter two buildings, it did not prevent the store, which is nearer the street, from receiving a severe scorching. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Following is a list of losses as far as obtainable: William H. Taylor, building $1,200; goods, $200; Dr. Brown, furniture, $200; William Holbrook, building, No. 1 $500; furniture $300; greater part of furniture saved; building No. 2 $1,000 contents lost. In all these instances there is little or no insurance.

Pharmacists Admitted to Practice. The state board of pharmacy continued its session all day yesterday, examining applicants and correcting the papers offered by the various candidates. Although the required percentage in this state is very high, all but one of those examined passed creditably in the majority of the test subjects. The following were successful and have been formally registered as pharmacists: L. M. Kirk, of Burlington; Frank R. Corven, of Tacoma; W. J. Nixon, of Eugene; W. H. Baisch, of Tacoma. Those granted certificates as registered assistants were: B. E. Bartrow, of Tacoma; J. A. Shoemaker, of South Bend; Thomas J. Wright, of Spokane, a graduate of the Kansas state board of pharmacy, and Albert H. Benhard, Ph. G., of the Massachusetts college of pharmacy, were registered on certificates without examination. One application to be admitted on certificate from one who presented credentials from the Nebraska state board of pharmacy was rejected on account of the percentage being below the average required in this state. The board will remain in session during the next three days.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH.

The Parish Prepares to Build on a More Central Site.

SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE COMING IN

A Site Secured on Madison Street, and the People Eager to Build a Larger Edifice.

The people of St. Mark's Episcopal parish have made an enthusiastic start to build a new church. Arrangements are now under way for the purchase from A. A. Denny of two lots and a half lying between Fifteenth street and Broadway and Madison street and Seneca. Mr. Denny has given the church until November 1 to accept his offer of the property, and at the rate subscriptions are coming in there is not much doubt that the necessary money will be on hand before that date to not only pay cash for the lots but to put up a very substantial building. Fifteen hundred dollars had been subscribed yesterday and those interested are very hopeful of increasing this amount very largely within a few days.

The site selected for the new building is considered by many to be the best location in the city for a church. From every section of the city, except North Seattle, people can get to the proposed site by one line of cars, while by one transfer those from the north, below the hill, can come. It is also within easy walking distance of a thickly settled part of the city, and as there is no other Protestant church in the neighborhood it is hoped that many new outside the fold of St. Mark's will be impelled to attend there. The fact that the property can be secured at a price which is well below the value of the lots, while down town lots are beyond their means, was also a factor in the selection of this site.

All who are familiar with the history and work of St. Mark's feel that it is important that the church should have a new place of worship in a more central part of the city. The present temporary structure has been enlarged three times to meet the growth of the congregation and it is now wholly inadequate to the needs of the church. The list of contributors has passed the 500 mark, while over 800 individuals are in one way or another connected with the church. Contrary to the impression of many, St. Mark's has scarcely any family of wealth, but many of its members are people of moderate means and those who work for their living.

It would be hard to find a more united church. There is absolute unity of thought among the people and an undivided attachment to the pastor. He has won the regard not only of his own parishioners, but of people of all denominations, by his broad-minded Christianity, and by the active part he has taken in all philanthropic work, having been the leading spirit in the Bureau of Associated Charities and in the adoption of the Pinckney land plan in this city. Mr. Garrett's friends outside the church would be glad to see him in a temple better suited for the church's services, and it is hoped that the present bright prospects for a newer, larger and better church will be fulfilled.
