Tatoosh Island Fog Signal
The night-board, by Rear Admiral John G. Walker, chairman, has given notice under date of November 12 that a plentiful supply of water having been obtained at this station, on Tatoosh Island, south side of the west entrance to the straits of Juan de Fuca after November 12, the steam for whistle will be sounded during thick or foggy weather, as stated in the List of Lights and Fog Signals and the List of Beacons and Buoys, Pacific coast, 1888, page 22, No. 90, and the List of Beacons and Buoys, Pacific coast, 1924, page 53.

A New Steel Armor
A new type of armor for warships has been devised by P. R. de F. d'Hurny, a French civil engineer, of Chicago. His idea is to secure in a steel box thin plates of steel with the edge presented to the fire of an enemy, and the advantages claimed are cheapness, ease and quickness of manufacture and the ability to replace a damaged box at sea. He also claims greater resistance than solid armor. A trial at Indian Head failed to make good the claim for resistance. One shot from a six-inch rifle, with a velocity of 2,100 feet per second, broke up a target of nickel steel, Harvay plates, so made, and six inches thick. But the projectile also broke up before getting through, and failed to penetrate the oak backing.
