

DRUGGED HER FIRST

Then Took Pearl Bryan to Kentucky to Behead Her.

THE CAB DRIVER TURNS UP.

Walling sat with Him and Jackson Was Inside the Carriage With the sick Girl.

Cincinnati, Feb. 15.—At the end of two weeks since the finding of the beheaded body of Pearl Bryan the evidence of guilt against her murderer remains circumstantial. What the popularly called "Cincinnati case" and Walling are found to be careful avoidance of direct connection with the crime of murder, but full of accusations, each arguing the other.

The strongest link in the chain of evidence against the two alleged murderers of Pearl Bryan is the fact that on the afternoon of George H. Jackson, private detective for Maj. Wittfield, on McGreger street, Mount Auburn, revealed the story.

George H. Jackson, private detective and commander of the Caldwell guards, a colored company in this city. On Friday night, January 3, he was drilling them until midnight. He went out afterward and was standing a moment at the corner of George and Elm streets, in the Tenderloin district of this city, when a tall, dark-skinned man wearing a military cap, came up and said to the company of bystanders:

"Do any of you fellows want to make $5 for driving a carriage tonight? Jackson accepted the offer. He has been a carriage driver all his life. Presently a square box surrey was driven down to where he was, and he was told that was the carriage.

The man on the seat beside him put a revolver to his head and said: "You drive that horse or I'll make an end of you very quickly." The horse was a large gray and he had a high head and moved very rapidly, and he was kept moving. The man on the seat with him took his name and residence and learned all about him and said: "If you ever say anything about this we will kill you before we get into trouble. We have friends on the outside that would follow you up and kill you."

Jackson says: "I believe they have been following me. It may be imagination, but I think I have been followed ever since these men have been in jail. I have never driven on that road before that I know of. The man on the seat directed me how to go. It was a very crooked road. We came out at last where they told me to stop. There were some thickets near by. They said the house where the woman was to go was not very far away. They would take her there and while she was there they were ready to go back. They told me to turn the horses around and wait for them. The man in the surrey got out first and helped the woman. She lay on him heavily, and as she walked along, dragged her feet. It was too dark for me to see anything. The man who got out of the surrey was not as tall as the man who sat by me. That man got off his seat and assisted in taking the woman away in the darkness. I looked for a hitching block and expected to find a round one. Instead of that I found a piece of railroad rail about a foot long, with two holes in it. I hitched the horse to that and waited a little while. I heard a very queer noise, something like rattling in the leaves along the way. A noise that I could not describe, but I thought it was made by a woman. I remembered the strange noises that the woman had been making all the way out. That noise I heard in the thicket frightened me, and I ran away as hard as I could. I got home on foot about 4:30 in the morning. I did not see anything more of them. When I heard of this murder I thought it must be the same case. I was afraid to talk, on account of the threats made. At last I thought I ought to talk about it and tell all I knew. I did not see any of these parties, either the men or the woman, so that I could not recognize their faces. The man on the seat beside me had a big overcoat on him, and I could not tell whether he was slender or not. All three wore dark clothing, and the woman was veiled. Before I started from Cincinnati the surrey was driven to me closed all around."

The man described the surrey as having a sort of cover in the front part of a square box, so as to permit the vehicle to make short turns. George H. Jackson is well known in this city. He has been a driver for many years for a great many reputable citizens, and he has the highest reputation among them for honesty and truthfulness. His story to the mayor thought under cross-examination never varied a jot from the story he gave to the Mount Auburn officers. He is believed to be perfectly truthful and entirely innocent of any guilty knowledge of the purpose of that trip to Fort Thomas. There were four members of the first regiment, National Guard, talking with him when this man came up and engaged him to drive the surrey.
