REJOICING IN CANTON. The People Ring the Alarm Bell and Fire the Guns IN HONOR OF THEIR TOWNSMAN Fifteen Thousand People Parade to Gov. McKinley's House.

He Makes a Graceful Response to the Congratulations of the Citizens—Friends Crowd the House and Many Shed Tears of Joy—Telegrams Pouring in Upon the Nominee.

McKinley's House, Canton, O., June 18.—A few seconds after the huge city fire alarm bell had begun clanging, a huge parade of 15,000 fellow-soldiers and fellow-citizens formed by prearrangement in front of the courthouse, and escorted by three companies of militia under the command of Capt. Harry France, with brass bands and a drum corps, moved up North Market street to Gov. McKinley's home on the hill. The same clock that notified Gov. McKinley of his nomination over the Associated Press wire had set the fire alarm going. A score of Gov. and Mrs. McKinley's personal friends had extended their congratulations before the parade reached the house.

Whatcom County Populists. Whatcom, June 18.—Special.—The Populist county convention for the election of fourteen delegates to the Tacoma district convention was held here today. The convention was called to order at Lighthouse hall shortly after 10 o'clock, and a temporary adjournment was taken to honor the election of C. E. Cline as chairman and Arthur Swin of Linden, secretary. There were about 100 delegates present, out of a total appointment of 150. The resolutions reaffirm the principles of the Omaha platform and declare against the fusion of the Populists with the state. The delegates to the Tacoma convention were instructed to support Mr. Mary E. Hays for U. S. senator, as she is called here, for delegate to the national convention.

Will Recommend Teller to the Chicago Convention. TWENTY-THREE WALKED OUT. Among Them Were Six Members of the United States Senate.

Pettigrew Tells Why He Can No Longer Act With the Republican Party—The Mining Camps of Colorado Firing Salutes in Approval of the Action of Teller.

St. Louis, June 18.—The silver delegates played a star-spangled today. It was the first time since the convention was called that the public attention was directed to the presidential nomination. The proceedings in the convention were of an impressive nature, and all thinking men present felt the gravity of the situation. There were only twenty-three of the silver men who left the hall, and there was a feeling that the hearts of the hundred and more who voted with the minority followed the departing delegations down the long aisle as they strode toward the exit.

Teller spent the afternoon at the Southern hotel, putting in the greater part of the time at the Colorado headquarters, chatting with his friends from that state and with all other chance callers as nonchalantly as if nothing unusual had transpired. He expressed regret as he went, but did not appear to have lost his interest in the proceedings by any means.

Senator Teller. From Montana, Congressman Hartman, went out with the bolt, the full delegation was in perfect sympathy with the movement, including Senators Carter and Mantle. They had differences of opinion about the necessity of going bodily out of the hall, some of them taking the position that it would be just as effective for the delegates to remain in their seats silent and without participating in the proceedings as to walk out. It was confidently expected that the Montana delegation will be found working in perfect harmony with their colleagues.

As an Indorsement of Teller's Action in Walking Out. Denver, June 18.—Senator McKinley this afternoon sent the following message: "Hon. Henry M. Teller, St. Louis: A national salute, with eight guns to follow, is being fired at the state capitol in honor of yourself and the other Colorado delegates for your brave and patriotic stand and loyalty to the people you represent. We are proud of the demonstration which you have made in the face of the opposition of the silver men. I believe the majority of the people of my state are with me in this course. I believe that the people of the state will approve or condemn my course at the polls next November. I have felt impelled to this course by the conviction that a deep conviction that the welfare of my constituents depended upon a proper solution of the question, and I could not listen to any argument of personal comfort or interest which might be presented to turn me from the course which I believed myself to be passing through."

ON THE FIRST BALLOT

Wm. McKinley Receives the Nomination for President. THE CHOICE MADE UNANIMOUS. Garret A. Hobart of New Jersey Nominated for Vice President.

The Silver Radicals, Led by Teller, Walk Out, After Justifying Their Action—Intensely Dramatic Scene During Teller's Farewell to the Republican Party—The Gold Leaders Treat the Seceders With Marked Courtesy—Forsaker's Speech Nominating McKinley Causes One of the Most Remarkable Demonstrations of Enthusiasm Ever Witnessed.

St. Louis, June 18.—The Republicans in national convention called their principles to the masthead today and placed in command of the ship which is to bear them to victory or disaster in November their popular idol, William McKinley, of Ohio, and Garret A. Hobart, of New Jersey. But there was mainly aboard, and at the last moment, the silver men were cast off, and the members of the crew who had shipped on many a voyage refused to subscribe to the new shipping articles, and walked down the gangplank.

Had yesterday declared their intention to refuse to subscribe to the gold plank in the platform, but today, after Senator Teller had made his final appeal to the convention not to take the sea which would wreck him and his colleagues out of the ranks of the party which in the past had honored them and which had delighted to have them stand by the gold declaration in the platform, no one who witnessed the scene will forget it. It was a grand and stirring scene. Senator Frank Cannon, of Utah, facing from the platform 15,000 brave, cheering, cheering people as he read the valdictory of the silver men, he stood firm and defiant, his pale face set in grim determination, and before him tried to cry him down, until the very courage displayed won for him the admiration which compelled silence. When he had finished the reading the crowds in the gallery burst out again with their cheers and cries of approval, but in the most orderly fashion he turned and shook hands with Senator-elect Forsaker, the chairman of the committee on resolutions, and called for "Senator-elect Joseph B. Foraker, of Ohio." Foraker stepped to the front and climbed the steps to the platform, where he stood on a shrill yell. The platform which he began to read with, with a few moments' delay, was fashionably filled, the one telegraphed throughout the country by the Associated Press. Foraker adjusted a pair of spectacles upon his forehead, and then, with a flourish, he read the same dumb show of a man talking which the colored minister had given, in the previous evening, to the delegates in the galleries. There was no opportunity in reading the platform for the fiery orator to utter a word, for the delegates who had been so long in the hall, the delegates of New York and Massachusetts who sat below him. The audience and delegates followed the reading with interest. The reference to the administration of Benjamin Harrison woke the first demonstration, but louder still came the roar when the words of the platform pledged the party again to protection of the interests of labor and American industries. The reference to the reciprocity of the policy of reciprocity also came in for a round of applause. Protection to the surplus revenue, the Maine, Maryland and Massachusetts delegations to their feet with cheers. The first sentence of the plank pledged the party to sound money, raised a great uproar among the delegates, but the reference to the free coinage of silver was declared. Then the delegates of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and New York, fans, canes, hats and flags wildly, until the pit looked like a hurricane and the galleries resounded with the cheering. The mention of the "gold standard" while received enthusiastically by the Massachusetts, Connecticut and New York delegations, did not arouse such great excitement. The Hawaii and Monroe doctrines were the next mention of the platform, and the Cuban plank caused general disappointment. As the plank was read, Col. W. A. Stone, of Massachusetts, arose and waded about his head the flag of the Cuban republic. The flag was that presented by the Cuban junta to James Creelman, the American correspondent, and by Gen. Weyler. The invitation to the women to help the Republican party to redeem the country from Democratic and Populism was given a good-natured cheer. A motion by Foraker to adopt the platform was seconded. One of the grand moments of the convention was at hand. The chairman announced that he would recognize to move a substitute for the chief held aloft; 15,000 people in the galleries rose simultaneously, and 15,000 through the windows of the hall. The black mass of delegates and alternates in the pit seemed also to rise en masse, and there and there a declaration of the opposition. Six American flags and long red-colored plumes waved frantically, while the noise was like the deep, hoarse roar of Niagara. An Ohio delegate seized the Buckeye standard and held it aloft until it was seized and carried to the platform, and opposite the stand an enormous crowd of delegates and alternates was hoisted to the gallery. The minutes passed, but the delegates and the spectators did not weary. Just at the close of the shouting thousands were ready to stink from sheer exhaustion, a man wearing a Napoleon cocked hat of the first empire came out from beneath the galleries and pushed his way over the press benches to the platform. Altogether the scene was a remarkable one, and testified to the popularity of the candidate who had been placed in the field.

McKinley's vote exceeded the expectations of his friends, as he received 511, within a vote and a half of the majority, and almost three times as many as his five opponents. The nomination of McKinley was the most unanimous with enthusiastic speeches from the representatives of the other candidates. Mark Hanna was obliged to respond to calls to address the delegates. After the decision of the Platt forces in New York not to present the name of McKinley, the name of McKinley was voted against him by the Warren, Miller faction, the nomination of Hobart, of New Jersey, became a certainty. Mr. Hanna and the McKinley forces were thrown for him, and although there was an attempt to conciliate the West on Evans, the McKinley vote was so overwhelming that it was not necessary to vote. Besides, it was the general sense of the delegates that the situation required the nomination of an Eastern man for vice president, and the McKinley nomination, but it required only one ballot to determine the contest. Hobart received 289 votes, nearly more than a majority of the delegates. The McKinley vote for Brock, Thurston, Grant, Dewey, and Brown.

The day broke bright and clear for the third day of the convention. The McKinley leaders had arranged to push things through. All preparations were made to adopt the platform and nominate McKinley before noon. There was an appeal to the imagination, the delegates advertised. Not of the silver men, and multitudes came to yell themselves hoarse when occasion demanded. Before the hourly calling of the delegates, the McKinley nomination, but it required only one ballot to determine the contest. Hobart received 289 votes, nearly more than a majority of the delegates. The McKinley vote for Brock, Thurston, Grant, Dewey, and Brown.
