

THE AMERICAN INDIAN

The American museum of natural history in New York city is about to send out an expedition, the purpose of which will be to establish just how America came to be peopled with Indians.

no tribes of the north and their traditions indicate that it is a very ancient game. In addition to these specific cases general resemblances may be found in the weapons, the rude games, the household and cooking utensils, the manner of dress and in the thousand and one other customs and ways in which one people could resemble another.

But there is a school of pre-ethnology and ethnology, the members of which hold that these forms of resemblance are not sufficient to warrant the assumption that the two races must have sprung from the same parent stem or at least from the same clan.

Dr. Boaz, who will take the expedition to the northwest coast, has been in Alaska before, and is well acquainted with the people, their mode of living and many of their dialects.

Dr. Boaz, who will take the expedition to the northwest coast, has been in Alaska before, and is well acquainted with the people, their mode of living and many of their dialects.

Dr. Boaz, who will take the expedition to the northwest coast, has been in Alaska before, and is well acquainted with the people, their mode of living and many of their dialects.

Following are some very interesting portions from a paper read by Max W. Rinehart at a meeting of veterans some time ago. As it is made up largely of personal reminiscences, it will be found entertaining reading especially for pioneers.

My first trip on the overland road, bearing the original one in 1854, was in 1853, when as regimental adjutant for Col. Stranahan, I was in command of five companies from Lapwai across the Salmon river mountains, through the region made famous 10 years later by the discovery of gold.

country, preying upon both miners and stockmen. During our march we broke up their deer falls and whisky den and land illicit traders and captured road agents in the Walla Walla jail, whence they easily fled to the coast.

marched from Fort Dalles on the Columbia about May 1, 1861, and two companies from Fort Walla Walla, supported by one company of Washington Territory infantry for camp duty, from Fort Boise.

Similarity of Types and Relics from Asiatic and Alaskan Stores. Those of Asia on the Left, Those of Alaska on the Right.

conditions have influenced his color gradually the process would naturally be slow in coming about, and that in itself would presuppose great antiquity of race.

At least in the few hundred years during which Europeans have inhabited America there seems to be no influence in the climate which would give their fair skins the color of copper.

made its first rendezvous in 1861 was named "Camp Baker," in honor of Senator D. W. Baker, of the Oregon legislature, who was killed at Ball's Bluff.

As the news of the great victory at Fort Donelson reached our camp, covering our flag with glory and filling the hearts of our command with patriotic fervor and gladness, we were ordered to march.

Dr. Angelo Heilprin, of the Philadelphia Academy of Science, has this to say regarding the discovery of American by Asiatics:

"No problem connected with American history is of deeper interest, or is more difficult to approach, than that which is associated with the origin of the true American people—the Indians—and the ancient civilization which is reflected in the stately monuments that are so abundantly scattered through parts of Mexico and the region lying farther to the south.

VENUS. Rises. Sets. May 11 4 38 m 6 40 m A May 12 4 35 m 6 37 m A May 21 2 39 m 4 43 m A May 22 2 36 m 4 40 m A

Now, for the first time, it became known to all of us that we were not going East to the mountains, but that our field of duty was to be confined to the bloody but no less arduous campaigns on the inhospitable frontier.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Dr. E. R. Tylor, the distinguished British anthropologist, in an address delivered two years ago before the British association, called attention to a remarkable resemblance existing between Mexican pictures, as shown in the Vatican codex, depicting the scenes of the journey of the soul in the land of spirits and certain scenes from the Buddhist purgatory.

Advertisement for 'WIVES, MOTHERS' and 'SEGURO' life insurance products, including contact information for agents.

Advertisement for 'HUDYAN' medicine, claiming to cure nervous debility, weakness, and various ailments.

Advertisement for 'HUDSON MEDICAL INSTITUTE' located at Stockton, Market and Ellis Sts., San Francisco, Cal.

Advertisement for 'THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SEATTLE' with details on capital and deposits.

Advertisement for 'PEOPLE'S SAVINGS BANK' located at Occidental Block, Seattle, Wash.

Advertisement for 'DENTON HORTON & CO. BANKERS' with details on capital and services.

Advertisement for 'BLOOD POISON' medicine, claiming to cure various ailments and improve health.