A SINKING STEAMER.

THE MONTE CRISTO'S NARROW ESCAPE AT MOUNT VERNON.
At 5 O'clock in the Morning, With Her Crew All Sound Asleep, She Mysteriously Hills With Water, and But for Timely Assistance Would Be Now in Davy Jones' Locker—The Clan McDonald and the Snag Boat Skagit Go to Her Aid and Get the Water Under Control.

Special Dispatch to the Post-Intelligencer.
MOUNT VERNON, June 12.—The steamer Monte Cristo narrowly escaped sinking at the dock in this city at an early hour this morning, with all hands on board. Mr. Soule, bridge tender of the swing bridge across the Skagit river, went down to the dock to inform the captain of the steamer Clan McDonald that he was ready to open the bridge. He then proceeded to the bridge, only a short distance above the dock, and looking back saw that the Monte Cristo had backed rapidly filling with water.

Special Dispatch to the Post-Intelligencer.
MOUNT VERNON, June 12.—The jury term in Skagit county closed today, and Judge Hadley has returned to his home in New Whatcom. The case that has excited perhaps the greatest interest during the term is that of A. Sebring vs. Skagit county. A. Sebring is the publisher of the Record, the Populist organ of Skagit county, and it is alleged that a written contract with the county treasurer for publishing the delinquent tax list during April as provided by law. The facilities of the Record are not adequate for getting out so large a list, and therefore Mr. Sebring made arrangements with another paper to do most of the work.
