

Photographs of Russian Im in Siberia and Russia, Pu

The Grand Duchess Tatiana and her sister Anastasia pushing a barrel of water for the garden at Tsarskoe-Selo, after their arrest.

The exiled Czar sawing wood at Tobolsk, Siberia, with Pierre Gilliard, French tutor of the Czarovitch, who remained loyal to his charges throughout. In the background is the greenhouse where the exiles sunned themselves.

Four of the Czar's children resting after their gardening tasks. Left to right: Olga Nicolaevna, Alexis Nicolaevitch, Anastasia.

The Grand Duchess Tatiana working with a soldier of the republic at Tsarskoe-Selo, carrying sods to fill in a hole in the garden.

Above—One of the rooms of the Governor's house at Tobolsk, Siberia, where the Imperial family was held in exile. Picture shows the Czarina's sitting room.

The former Czar and his party at work in the lawn into a kitchen garden. Arrow points to the Czar parasol and two of the grand duchesses. The garden August 12, 1917.

Alexis, the Czarovitch, and the Grand Duchess Tatiana resting under guard in the Tsarskoe-Selo grounds after working in the garden. The closest watch was kept by the republic's authorities.

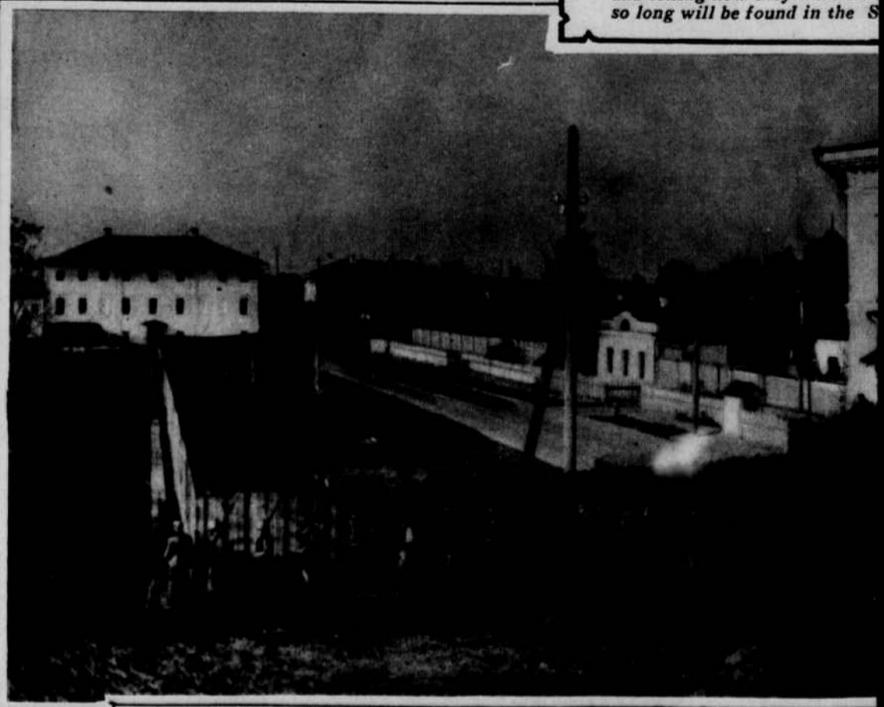

At left—Room in the Governor's house at Tobolsk, occupied by the four Grand Duchesses during their exile. Photographs on the walls came from their rooms in Petrograd.

An article descriptive of and telling how they were taken so long will be found in the S

In the park at Tsarskoe-Selo, showing the Grand Duchess Tatiana seated at the very limit of bounds set by the guards. Note the two soldiers of the republic watching her.

HOUSE OF THE GOVERNOR AT TOBOLSK, SIBERIA, WHERE THE SEEN AT THE LEFT, MARCHING TOWARD THEIR BARRACKS (REAR LEFT) TASTIE. THE EXILES LIVED HERE FROM SEPTEMBER, 1917, TO APRIL WERE MURDERED.