FATE OF EUROPE IS NOW IN PREMIERS' HANDS, SAYS GIBBS

Battle of Ideals Between Lloyd George and Briand, Already On, Viewed as History Making.

ENGLAND GETS JEALOUS Fears French Bid for Autocracy on Continent Menaces British Power and Trade.

SPECTRE OF NEW WARS Hardening Policy, With Counsel and Judicial Help, Looked Upon as Stabilizer in Crisis.

By SIR PHILIP GIBBS. Special Cable to THE NEW YORK HERALD. Copyright, 1921, by THE NEW YORK HERALD. New York Herald Bureau, London, May 14. Beneath the surface of political events in Europe, as recorded in the daily press, a great deal of secret history is being made which will be fully revealed only in future memoirs and indiscretions. The most interesting drama in the world to-day is the conflict of ideas between England and France, due to vital differences in policy and tradition and conducted with great skill, courtesy and diplomacy by the statesmen of both countries. It was summed up in the intellectual duel between the Prime Ministers, Mr. Lloyd George and M. Briand, at the recent London conference on German reparations. These two men, curiously alike in temperament and history and each representing the national aspirations of his people in this time of a world crisis, are not so much leaders and pioneers of the new world which is being made out of the ruins of war as men who carry on, despite themselves, the old ideas which have been at work in Europe for centuries of history in that long struggle for a balance of power in Europe. France now under Briand sees herself supreme on the Continent and once again Napoleonic traditions have been reawakened. England under Lloyd George is uneasy as always in history in the case of any power claiming that supremacy. That is to say, the people of the old tradition, aristocratic and conservative in thought, are stirred by impulses of ambition or resentment, though in both countries many people are looking ahead to quite new ideals of international relationship, and more so in England than in France. Once Ured New Ideals Now Old. It is an extraordinary thing that both Lloyd George and Briand were once leaders of new ideals and are now champions of the old national traditions. Briand's life story runs along the same lines as that of the British Premier. The son of humble parents of Nantes, in Brittany, he became a lawyer in Paris, but could get no briefs until he volunteered to defend a wretched peasant who had murdered a policeman. "There is no defence," said the peasant when Briand spoke to him in his prison cell, but the young lawyer made such a speech for the defence, exalting the peasant type and denouncing the police as agents of tyranny, that France rocked with excitement day by day as the trial continued. Briand went back to Paris with a few francs and some old shirts and was embraced by Jean Jaures, leader of the Socialists, who gave him a seat in the office of Humanite, the organ of revolutionary labor. Here Briand became famous for his journalistic attacks on the Government and afterward as an orator of advanced socialism or syndicalism. He was the first to forge the weapon of the general strike, but it was used first against himself when for the sake of power he abandoned the ranks of revolt and took office under the Government. Lloyd George's Similar History. I met him in Paris when his old associates called a general strike to drag him down. I remember him now as I faced him in the gilded room of the Ministry across the table where Napoleon once sat. I remember the humorous, cynical look in his big, black eyes and the way in which he spoke of this menace to life and order in France. As all the world knows, he killed the strike by calling the men to the colors under the penalty of death. How strangely like the history of Lloyd George! He was also a law-

ROME, May 14.—The firemen, policemen, street sweepers and other municipal employees went on strike last night and they threaten that all municipal functions will be suspended unless the Prefect revokes the ordinance which provides that fire-attending performances.

300 BIRDS KILLED BY STRIKING TOWER

Clerks in Metropolitan Life Building Find Some Songsters in Corridors. Some time during Friday night a great flock of singing birds, journeying up from the South, lost their way in the fog and rain and crashed into the Metropolitan tower.

SURVIVORS REST IN PARK Lose Way in Fog and Rain While Finishing Last Lap of Migration From South.

Observers who have been watching bird migrations through the city for many years said that they could not remember a similar occurrence. There are believed to have been 1,000 birds in the flock, including more than twenty varieties. Ordinary migratory units seldom contain more than two or three hundred birds. This one was large because the migration this spring has been slow, due to the many rains and intermittent winds.

CLERKS IN METROPOLITAN LIFE BUILDING FIND SOME SONGSTERS IN CORRIDORS.

Some time during Friday night a great flock of singing birds, journeying up from the South, lost their way in the fog and rain and crashed into the Metropolitan tower. Passersby early yesterday found 300 of them dead on the pavements of Twenty-third street and Madison avenue and in Madison Square Park. All yesterday afternoon the survivors, several hundred in number, and of many varieties, rested in the park and searched for food.

CLERKS IN METROPOLITAN LIFE BUILDING FIND SOME SONGSTERS IN CORRIDORS.

Clerks who came to work in the offices of the Metropolitan Life Building were surprised to find Maryland yellow throats and black throated blue warblers fluttering through the corridors. A postman in the Madison Square branch station found a yellow throat perched before the stamp window and took the bird out to the park, where he set it free.

AURORA BOREALIS SEEN CLEARLY IN NEW YORK

The aurora borealis, or northern lights, was observed by thousands of persons between Flatbush and the Bronx last night. It was visible to the naked eye, and according to officials of the Naval Observatory in Washington, was caused by an immense sun spot 34,000 miles long and 21,000 miles wide. Officials said it would again be visible to-day and that it could be seen easily through a smoked glass. It will not disappear, they added, until the eruption of internal gases which caused it subsided.

VAUCLAIN'S QUERIES FOR SEEKERS OF JOBS

RETHLEHEM Pa., May 14.—Instead of Thomas Edison's questionnaire Samuel Vauclain, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, told engineering students at Lehigh University in an address here to-day that he preferred to ask applicants for work the following three questions: "How many cents are there in a dollar?" "How many feet are there in a mile?" "How many square feet are there in an acre?"

SEARCHING RAVINES FOR MISSING MINISTER

POUGHKEEPSIE, May 14.—The Rev. Jacob C. Happy, 54 years old, retired from the ministry and a resident of the Bushville section, has been missing since last Saturday, it became known to-day. Searching parties went out to look for him in the ravines and stretches of forest near Bushville and Traver Hollow have been unable to get trace of him. He was feeble and near sighted and it is feared he may have died from starvation.

Friends Fear Rev. Mr. Happy Has Starved to Death.

Mr. Happy was last seen as he walked across the ground of Martin Avery's house, where he made his home. The State police have joined in the search.
