Mrs. Joseph Palmer Knapp came to the beach with her guest, Miss Emma Nos, a protégée of Mrs. E. Henry Harrison, who at one time sang with the Chicago Opera. In a group near by were Mrs. Goodhue Livingston, Jr., Miss Florence Johnson and Miss Betty Thompson.

Mr. Alfred E. Schermhorn, who came to look on, wore a costume of white linen embroidered with black and a hat of black crin. She carried a Japanese umbrella of black, ornamented with large figures of gold and red. Mr. and Mrs. Lyttleton Fox and Mr. and Mrs. Alfonso Villa and Miss Estelle O'Brien were in another of the groups.

Others at the beach were Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Brown, with whom were Mr. Milton S. Berger, who had come from Newport; Mr. Thomas Beale Davis, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Fietmann, Jr., Marshall J. Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. Dalie Bache Pratt, Mr. A. D. B. Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. C. Mrs. Newbold Edgar, who has been with her in-law and daughter, Lieut.-Commander and Mrs. Steuart Davis, will start early next week to be at the Chatham Arms, Chatham, Mass., with her daughter, Mrs. Henry Sanford.

Others in the Colony.

Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose Ely Chambers, who were married in Boston last April, arrived here to-night from New London to be with his parents, Dr. and Mrs. P. Audience Stands as G. M. Cohan Makes Farewell Speech

Unusual Tribute Paid to Actor as He Retires From Theatrical Profession.

An unusual tribute was paid to George M. Cohan last night at his final performance as The Vagabond in "The Tavern" at the Hudson Theatre, and his farewell to the stage, when the entire audience, which had insisted on his making a speech, stood up when he began to talk and remained standing until he had finished.

Mr. Cohan is retiring from the stage and the theatrical business after twenty-five years of continuous service as actor, manager and producer because of the closed shop principle put in practice by the Actors Equity Association.

The theatre was crowded with friends of the actor. In the audience were members of the Friars, Lambs, Fidelity League and allied organizations and a number of actors Mr. Cohan would have sent out on the road in his numerous companies had he not decided to retire from the producing field.

After the first act of the play Mr. Cohan was called before the curtain fifteen times before he would make a speech. Finally he said: "I want to thank you for this remarkable and heartfelt demonstration, particularly on this warm night. As the vagabond says 'It is worth while being born to have lived for such a night as this.' I am going away with great regret. I have done nothing but what I have been forced into doing. If at any time any one can show me how I can return and retain my self respect I hope it will be pointed out to me. When labor no longer has a strange hold on the profession I may come back."

In the lobby of the theatre when the performance began was a rose tree which stood about ten feet high. It was labelled "To George M. Cohan—Au revoir but not goodbye. From the Friars."

Mr. Cohan is abbot of that organization. The formal piece later was sent to the Misericordia Hospital in East Eighty-sixth street.

Among those in the boxes were David Belasco, Miss Margaret Anglin, Henry Miller, Misses Blanche Bates, Amelia Bingham and Julia Arthur, David Warfield, Miss May Irwin, Louis Mann, Thomas E. Shea, Miss Lenore Ulric, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Coburn, Howard Kyle, William Dodge, Lester Lenox, Allan Dinehart, Curtis Cooksey, Misses Minnie Dupree, Edna Whistler, Marjorie Wood, Marguerite St. John, Marie Louise Walker and Arlene Hackett, Mrs. Cortlandt Palmer and Wilson Reynolds.

The farewell also marked the last performance of "The Tavern," in which Mr. Cohan played the part of The Vagabond.
