

Norman O. Walker, the only American of those on board the ZR-2 who escaped with his life. International.

This striking photograph of the stern half of the wrecked dirigible was made immediately after she broke in two and fell in flames. Rescuers immediately began cutting away the covering, the folds in which show a point where the framework buckled. International.

This mass of tangled wreckage shows how complete was the destruction of the forward part of the ZR-2. It fell in shallow water. but there is a tide of forty feet in the Humber at Hull and the wreckers could work only at intervals. International.

American Legionaries in France were central figures on the occasion of the unveiling at Flirey of a monument commemorating the inestimable services of the United States to the cause of French freedom. Keystone View Co.

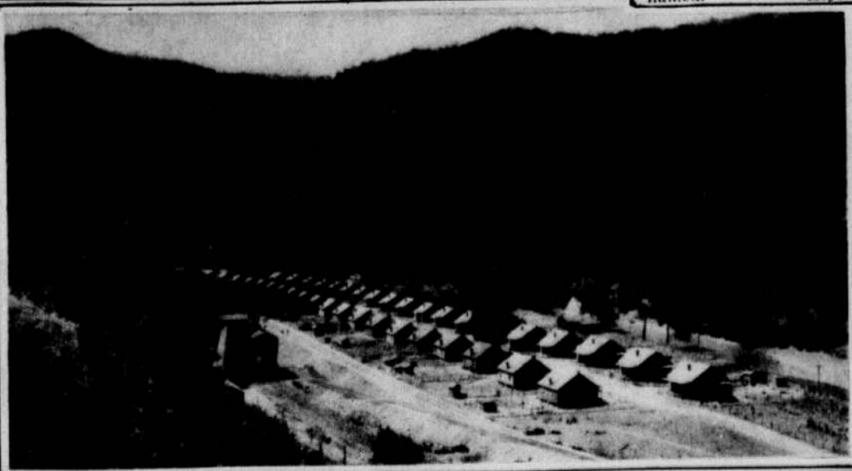

After the unveiling of the monument at Flirey Col. Emery of the American Legion was decorated as Commander of the Legion of Honor and also received the Croix de Guerre. He is at the left, arm in arm with Marshal Foch. Ambassador Herrick and M. Barthou are in the order named. Keystone View Co.

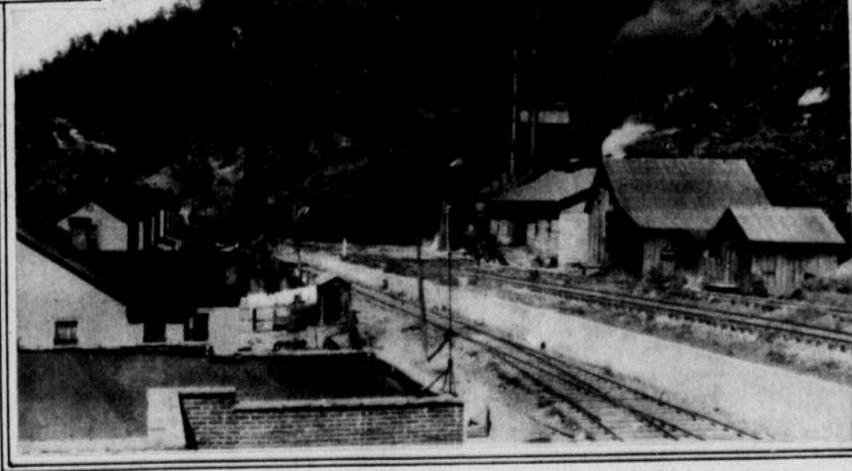

Above—A photograph made under fire at Blair Mountain, W. Va. A machine gun is in position to repel a threatened attack by armed miners. International.

At right—This photograph shows a miners' village in Logan county, W. Va. The houses are owned by the Monitor Coal Company and rented to the workers. A. H. Thomas.

Above—An encampment of miners in the Tug River Valley of West Virginia. Many such temporary communities dot the hillsides of Boone and Logan counties. D. Steele.

At left—The Monitor Coal Company's power house, tipples and plant at Logan, a section invested by United States troops. A. H. Thomas.