

PETERS SHOT SOON AFTER ARRIVAL HERE

Paris Island, S. C., Reports He Left There Day Before Ward Killed Him.

BRAGGED OF 'FRIENDS' Said He Knew Where He Could Get All the Money He Wanted.

EXPECTED MOTOR RIDES Theory Is He Went Straight to Ward on Leaving Train Day of the Murder.

The killing of Clarence Peters by Walter S. Ward took place within twelve hours after Peters' arrival in New York from the naval training station at Paris Island, S. C. This fact was established at Paris Island yesterday.

Peters, who had gone to Paris Island in April from his home in Haverhill, Mass., as a recruit for the Marine Corps, was rejected on May 12 because he had been discharged from the navy for bad conduct in 1919.

It would appear from this that Peters, if he did not go straight to Ward as soon as he struck New York, lost no time in getting into communication with him and arranging for the meeting which resulted in the death of the former sailor.

Boasted of Friends With Pull. It was also learned that while Peters was at Paris Island he boasted of having "friends with a pull" in the North and that he could get all the money he wanted by wiring for it, although his parents in Haverhill are far from affluent.

He also told those who would listen that he had good friends in New York who would look after him, but upon leaving Paris Island he asked for transportation only to Philadelphia, saying that he could get all the money he wanted by wiring for it, although his parents in Haverhill are far from affluent.

He stopped in for a few minutes, barely spoke to me and went out. On Monday, May 22, the day he gave himself up, he came to the office about 11 o'clock, asked me if everything was all right, and left. An hour later one of the men in the office said, "My God, Tubbs, have you heard the news? W. S. has confessed to killing a man and he's out on $10,000 bail."

'GRANDP' RESISTS AS CHILD CLINGS TO HAND

Boy of 3 Vainly Tries to Wake His Companion and Then Cries, but Is Unable to Tell Who He Is or Whence They Came.

An unidentified man about 50 years of age came into the waiting room of the elevated station at the corner of Bridge street, Brooklyn, last night about 8 o'clock, with a three-year-old boy clinging to his hand. The man sat on a bench and the boy sat alongside him, his eyes wide open at the sight of the unaccustomed surroundings. They sat there for some time, when suddenly the man's head fell forward on his breast. The little boy said something to him, and when the man did not answer the child began to cry. Several women tried to wake him, but he told them that he wanted his "grandpa" to talk to him. He climbed into the man's lap, but still the man did not respond, and when another man in the station shook "grandpa" without "grandpa" saying any attention, some called Patrolman William O'Connor of the Poplar street station.

The policeman saw that the man was seriously ill, and he summoned a surgeon from the Cumberland Street Hospital. The doctor said that the man had died before he got there. Patrolman O'Connor picked the little boy up in his arms and carried him to the station house where the matron tried to get him to tell his name and the name of the man who had been with him. But the child would say nothing but "Grandpa is dead." He said that many times and then he began to cry and would not be comforted.

Finally the baby was sent to the rooms of the Children's Society, where he will be cared for until his relatives are found. There was nothing in the man's pockets by which he could be identified excepting a card with this inscription: "Wilson Line, Wilmington Steamship Corporation." The card had no address on it. The man's body was sent to the morgue of the Kings County Hospital.

It haven't heard anything about it, said he. Both the Sheriff and the District Attorney are getting loads of anonymous letters and telephone calls. A few of these communications appear to know something of value and appointments are being made with such as will meet an investigator. The State police are also at work, and are looking especially for a man who is supposed to know of a possible motive that Ward could have had for killing Peters. Coroner Fitzgerald still delays the calling of an inquest because there is no evidence at hand on which an attempt to attack Ward's story could be based.

Palmer E. Tubbs, associate of Ward and his assistant in the Bronx head, Ward resigned, following his surrender, and his assistant in The Bronx head, quarters of the Ward-Baking Company, and he is now in the hands of the State police.

He said that on the day before the shooting Ward drove him home from the office. Ward was in good spirits when they parted at 6 P. M. "The next morning, May 19, the morning of the shooting, I went to the office. About 11 o'clock a maid at the Ward home telephoned me that he was not coming, but wanted me to find out what time the Majestic was expected to dock, as he wanted to meet his father, who was returning from abroad."

MEN IN PLAYFUL BOUT FALL UNDER 'L' TRAIN

Pair Tumble From Platform Onto Tracks.

Two men tussling good naturedly on the platform of the Seventy-second street station of the Second Avenue elevated yesterday fell beneath a train. The men are Michael Cuba and George Hoch, both of Winfield, L. I. They had come to town to take part in the parade, and having done so visited some friends in Yorkville and then started home. They began to tussle each other as they waited on the southbound platform, and just as the train was drawing in Hoch fell on the tracks. Cuba jumped down to help him get out of the way. Although Motorman Parham threw on the brakes with such force that the passengers were pitched from their seats, the train struck the men and carried them fifteen feet before it was stopped.

To Read Books at Home or on Long Journeys

should not be simply to pass away the time. Better, far better, to spare your eyes and look out the windows or talk with a friend. It is not a mere commonplace to say that "reading without reflection is like eating without digestion." Sydney Smith, so often quoted, said: "We may always keep the best company with the best of books." Lay up safely in your mind the treasures in good books. [Signed] John Wauwauke, May 31st, 1922.

The Vehement Flame By Margaret Deland

Ready Thursday. A great moral question is involved in this story, which, it is predicted, will be discussed even more widely than was "The Awakening of Helena Richie," and "The Iron Woman." Did the young man, who made such a tangle of his life, do right in accepting the happiness that came to him at last? You will ponder this question after reading this powerful novel by one of our most representative American women writers of fiction.

Most Royal of Gifts for the Shut-in—Blind—Aged

A Radio Receiving Outfit. This is the boon conferred by the modern magic of science, which eclipses all the fairy-tale wonders that charmed our childhood, and scatters joys that the most kindly-disposed of fairy godmothers never dreamed of bestowing.

Into the darkness of the blind, into the seclusion of the invalid's room, or the lonely life of one who is isolated in any way, it can bring the hum of the busy world, the interest of fine entertainments, the uplift and solace of splendid music.

Send them a radio receiving outfit, and they can listen in, at almost any hour of the day or night, on the grand concert, on the public orator's ringing speech, on the latest news dispatches, on time signals by which clock or watch can be set, and, in fact, on all of the many things which go to make up the modern broadcasting program of the great stations.

In the Radio Section, Seventh Gallery, are receiving sets all ready for installation or parts for those who wish to make their own outfit. Radio experts will offer advice or suggestions on anything connected with the work.
