ARREST TO-DAY PROMISED IN JERSEY DOUBLE KILLING

Continued from First Page. meaning the making of one or more arrests, was imminent. Detectives of both counties have established the fact that nothing important took place in the church on the night of the crime. It may be said, too, that for the present they have eliminated from the case Mills, the husband of the dead woman, and perhaps the most pitiable figure in the whole affair. The officers have heard that a gun was kept in the Hall home by Mrs. Hall's brother, Willie Stevens. They have heard that Willie had to go to Hall for money, and that he frequently quarrelled over the allowance he received out of the fortune of about $100,000 left to him by his mother. In fact, Willie Stevens and his eccentricities have engaged the attention of more than one of the detectives, and for the son of a well to do family, his habits, to say the least, have been extraordinary, and in sharp contrast to those of his brother Henry, noted trap shooting expert. Willie passed the winter in Florida, and part of the summer at Bayhead, N. J. But when in New Brunswick he seems to have loafed about the poor Hungarian quarter looking at the little girls that played about the streets, and making friends of the poor of the neighborhood, who gained his friendship because they did not laugh at him. Part of his spare time Willie spent at the firehouse of Engine No. 3, telling his troubles to Capt. Michael Regan, asking for sympathy, occasionally and going to fires when they would let him. He appeared there on Friday morning, the morning after the murder, and told one of the firemen, as has been published, that "There's going to be trouble." He would not explain, although he was asked what he meant and since the discovery of the crime, it has been surmised that he meant his brother-in-law, the clergyman, was missing and the town would soon know it. Had Quarrelled With Hall. It now appears Willie went even further the next morning, for Capt. Regan said this evening: "Willie came in here on Saturday about two hours before the bodies were found, and said to me, 'I've had trouble up at the house.' I said what's the matter, 'Is some one sick.' He said, 'No, I can't tell you what it is, but, Captain, if I'm grouch' around here to-day, don't pay any attention to me. I've had trouble up at the house.' "He often made that sort of remarks to me. When I talked to him about it, he explained that Mr. Hall acted as his guardian and gave him his allowance weekly. He complained that he did not get enough, and told me he had asked Mr. Hall for more, but that he wouldn't give it to him, and then they quarrelled. "He was a harmless sort, but he got mad when anyone teased him, and then he would say 'I am not coming in here any more' and the next day he would be back just the same. I saw him this morning before the funeral of Mr. Hall. I had been reading the newspapers, and I asked him if there was a gun in the house. He said to me 'There was only one gun in the house, and that was mine. I kept it locked up in my desk.' This is in agreement with information which the Prosecutor of Somerset, Mr. Bekman, obtained yesterday to the effect that Willie had a gun in the house, and that he understood it to be a .38 caliber revolver. The cartridge found near the bodies was of .32 caliber. Former Senator Florence explained how it came that Willie, with a fortune of his own, was on an allowance though he is more than forty. Florence said Henry Stevens and Mrs. Hall as executors of their mother's will had a trustee appointed for Willie. The trustee was Joseph H. Porter, trust officer of the National Bank of New Jersey. Porter is away, having gone on a two week's vacation last Saturday, the day the bodies were found. Had Many Friends Among Poor. Regan went on to say that Willie frequently went over to the Hungarian district near the railroad tracks, taking with him a pair of opera glasses. There

Mills, with the same innocence he has been displaying ever since the world seemed to fall in on him last Saturday, believed her. Mills thinks it an absolute impossibility for the stories about Hall and Mrs. Mills to have any foundation in fact. Dr. Arthur Leland Smith was Mrs. Mills' physician and attended her at the hospital. He says that a major operation was performed on her in February and that "she had recovered normally." He had seen her infrequently since February, the last time about two months ago, when she went to him complaining of some minor ailment. He considered her to be in normal physical condition at that time. It also was learned that not only was Hall paying for the operation at the hospital and deducting small sums from Mills' salary to reimburse himself, but he had paid, with his own check, part of Dr. Smith's bill and had guaranteed the rest. Strangely, notwithstanding this, and Mills' statement that Dr. Hall was a brother to him, and had visited and helped to nurse him when he was ill, Mills did not appear at the funeral this noon. The funeral of his wife will take place to-morrow morning at 10:30 from an undertaking establishment in Bayard street. The funeral of Hall was impressive. Outside the church in George street were more than two hundred of the curious and the churning of the organ, congregation, however, being composed nearly in its entirety of women. Only two newspaper men were admitted. The police guard was strict. Mrs. Hall in black, and heavily veiled, entered the church a few minutes after noon, after the congregation had been seated. She was leaning on the arm of her brother, Henry. In the party were also Charles and Moncure Carpenter and their wives. The service was brief and no eulogy was spoken, the brief service of the Episcopal Church and the singing of hymns making up the service. The coffin had been sealed since the body was placed in it, and neither Mrs. Hall, nor any member of the family has viewed it since the tragedy. Bishop Albion W. Knight of Trenton officiated and at his request the congregation passed out as the last verse of "Go Forward, Christian Soldier," was sung. There was a delay of nearly half an hour in which Mrs. Hall and members of the family alone remained within the little ivy covered edifice. Following that the coffin was carried out and placed in the hearse which was driven to the railroad station, the interment having been arranged for at Green-Wood Cemetery, Brooklyn. Mrs. Hall, with her veil still down, and additionally shielded by her brother, who held his hat before her face to prevent photographers taking her picture, walked rapidly from the church entrance to the waiting motor car, and thence to other members of the family to Brooklyn. It is understood a detective accompanied the party to Brooklyn. In the congregation were twenty-seven clergymen who held their hats high in high esteem. They were from Princeton, Trenton, Elizabeth, Rahway and many other nearby towns, and a number of ministers of the other denominations also turned out. Again, as in the last three days, the extraordinary high place that Hall had gained for himself was shown. An example of the feeling is indicated by the following letter in a local newspaper to-night: "A mysterious and awful tragedy has occurred in our midst. The minds of all have been greatly disturbed. May I be permitted through your columns, Mr. Editor, to urge calmness, of spirit, suspension of judgment till all facts are discovered, and even though the worst possible is revealed charity greater than faith or hope. "Alas for the rarity of Christian character under the sun. "All we know is that the Sixth Commandment has been doubly broken, by whom we do not know, nor the motive,

BATTEN Which is the best advertisement in this newspaper? IF you were to go back over this paper with the conscious intention of choosing the best advertisement, there would be slight chance of your finding it. If an advertisement is good, you seldom think of it as an advertisement at all; you merely act on it. Furthermore, the advertisement may not be addressed to you or your kind. Until you know the exact aim of an advertisement you cannot judge it. And unless each advertisement has an definite objective of a complete campaign, it is not a good advertisement. If you ever exclaim, "That's a clever advertisement!" it probably isn't an effective advertisement. "You," said Demosthenes to his rival orator Aeschines, "make them say, 'How well he speaks.' I make them say, 'Let us march against Philip.'" One of the great historic compliments was that of the country yokel who said he did not like David Garrick's acting because he didn't seem like an actor, but acted just like a person in ordinary life. This country bumpkin felt he was not getting his money's worth (theatre tickets evidently were costly even in the eighteenth century). Advertisers sometimes suffer from similar myopia when criticizing "copy." Good advertisements are impossible without two elements: one, the human element—a good writer; the other, a definite aim. Without the latter, the former is futile. We have worked out and proved out a method for determining the aim in advance of the writing of a syllable. It is not a secret, and if you are interested we shall be glad to discuss it with you. ONCE a month, or more frequently, we issue a publication called Batten's Wedge. Each issue is devoted to a single editorial on some phase of business. If you are a business executive and would like to receive copies, write us. George Batten Company, Inc.
