

Daily Eagle

M. M. MURDOCK, Editor. SUNDAY MORNING, DEC. 19.

THE ARGO

"The Washburn Argo" is the style and title of a new college paper reaching us from Topeka, edited and published in the interest of the scholars of the Washburn. The "Argo" boasts a corps of six associate editors, two of whom are ladies, and an editor in chief, who is the oldest son of our honored United States senator, John J. Ingalls—Edithworth Ingalls. The new candidate for this special field has more of the air and make-up of a literary magazine than the publication issued at the State University.

RAPID COMPOSITION.

A type-setting contest between Joseph McCann, of the Herald, and W. C. Barnes, of the World, took place in New York on the 15th inst., in the presence of a large number of printers. The purse contended for, $1,000. The trial lasted four hours, beginning at 11 o'clock. The type was million, set without paragraphs. Barnes finished his first 1,000 ems in twenty-nine minutes and thirty seconds, and McCann completed his first 1,000 two minutes later. At 3 o'clock time was called. McCann had set 8,662 1-2 ems and Barnes 7,951. Then each man was obliged to correct their own proof. When the corrections had been made and the number of lines deducted which each had lost through mistakes, it was found that McCann had 7,662 1-2 ems to his credit and Barnes 6,576. McCann was declared the winner. The meaning of this to the average reader is that these two men in four hours time picked up, put in place, justified and corrected about forty thousand distinct and separate bits of metal, each bit representing a letter of the alphabet.

HIGH PRICES.

Special Commissioner J. H. Aley, who was appointed to appraise the lands reserved for the right of way of the Wichita Eagle railway, profiting by the lesson given by Marsh Murdock has valued the lands required at $1,000 per acre. In fact, he now holds that all lands to the western part of the state are worth $1,000 an acre. Marsh received that amount for lands of which he was assigned to appraise. He is a friend and companion in arms, who is conceded to have been the most distinguished and successful volunteer general in the Union army. General Logan's new book, coming as it does so closely on the heels of the publication of the Great Memoirs, written as it is by General Grant's esteemed friend and companion in arms, who is conceded to have been the most distinguished and successful volunteer general in the Union army. General Logan's appointment serves as a fitting companion to the memoirs of his great chief. Indeed, no story of the late conflict, which relates chiefly to the conduct of the war and the operations of the armies in the field, can be otherwise than incomplete as a history of the rebellion without a companion piece that shall show the workings of the conspiracy, which originated and gave life to the rebellion, and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies. Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies. Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

THE MEETING OF THE STATE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

To the Editor of the Eagle. G. C. Brackett, the secretary of the State Horticultural society has notified me as the vice-president of the society for Sedgewick county, that the next semi-annual meeting of the society would be held in Wichita, and he hoped it would be agreeable to the citizens of Sedgewick. In reply, I would say that the Horticultural society of Sedgewick county will accord you a hearty welcome and provide for the entertainment of all the members of said society, and as many visitors as shall identify themselves with our society. G. S. SAMPSON, Vice Pres. Sedgewick Co.

KINGMAN

KINGMAN, Kan., Dec. 18, 1886.

To the Editor of the Eagle. We will endeavor to give your readers a few items of news from this place this week, and if we get over it we will send in another dose next week, that is if anything happens. The first thing we will speak of is that the snow is about all gone, and it will doubtless be news to a good many in South Carolina.

Last night there was given at the rink a grand masquerade ball and dance. Some forty couple took part and the fun and jollity went on until the "sun" hour of the night.

Jas. Mahaffey, ex-jolly landlord of the Central, leaves to-morrow for Lane county to look after his claim.

A good many legal fights at our county court this week.

A minstrel company calling themselves the "Black Cupboard-door," or "Black Troubadour Minstrels," are billed for to-morrow night. Hold us some-body, or we'll take it in.

Court was opened at late hour last night, hearing the argument in the noted D. M. & A. injunction case.

The telephone company have just received five more instruments, which they propose in a few days to place between here and Platt Center. They propose in a short time to extend their lines further southward and westward.

Ye fascinating and beautiful book agent has been doing the city for the past few days. The book takes, from the fact that it has a handsome crown in the front.

An elite ball will take place soon at the opera house.

Major Bross is in the city this week, shaking hands with his many friends.

Work on Bush & Hinton's block is progressing rapidly, and will soon be ready for occupancy.

We see in the Chicago News that Kahl & Middleton are advertising for people with big feet. If our neighboring towns haven't dropped onto this, we could lead a procession from that would be all that could be desired. MERRIS.

ARGONIA.

ARGONIA, Kas., Dec. 17.

To the Editor of the Eagle. During the past few days several changes have taken place in the business directory of Argonia.

L. P. Sayers has retired from the firm of Brown & Sayers, grocers.

J. E. Brown has traded his grocery store with J. W. Wilkinson for the furniture, etc., of the Arlington house, which is now in charge of M. F. and J. E. Brown, who will spare no pains to sustain the reputation of the Arlington as a first class house.

Albert Davis has purchased the scales and coal yard of Robbins & Harbert. C. H. Danley is buying and shipping wild game.

Joseph Arnold is paying all the market will allow for hogs and cattle. J. T. Ennis has closed the "Golden Rule" and leased the main room to W. C. A. Bain for a drug store.

The A. O. U. W. are fitting up the hall over the Argonia bank for a lodge room.

Geo. Close, the barber, who has been sick so long, is again on his feet and able to be out on the street.

Argonia's only light sports a plug hat.

Several of the aimors who went to the Indian Territory, have returned and report a successful chase.

At our township election on the 15th inst., the bonds for building a bridge across the Chikaskia south of town, were carried by a large majority, thus adding another link of property to our flourishing city.

Quite a number of the business men and leading citizens received intelligence yesterday that old Santa Claus on wings of Boreas with presents innumerable, would probably swoop down on our quiet city about 8 o'clock Christmas Eve, accordingly a meeting was held last night and various committees appointed to assist the old fellow to alight, distribute, and distribute his huge pack. He has promised every boy and girl in town a present.

I. R. Mason, the efficient agent for the Southern Kansas railroad and wife, started to Illinois to-day for a few weeks visit with his parents and friends at his old home.

D. H. Bryant and family will go to Indiana on a visit next week.

D. A. Chandler will visit his parents at Burlington, Iowa, next week.

John Kennedy, the most popular young man in this city, is enjoying a visit with his mother at Fort Scott this week.

The beautiful snow is rapidly disappearing, but we still have several yards of it left.

THE GREAT CONSPIRACY.

Its Origin and History, by John A. Logan.

To the Editor of the Eagle.

The above is the title of General Logan's new book, coming as it does so closely on the heels of the publication of the Great Memoirs, written as it is by General Grant's esteemed friend and companion in arms, who is conceded to have been the most distinguished and successful volunteer general in the Union army.

General Logan's appointment serves as a fitting companion to the memoirs of his great chief. Indeed, no story of the late conflict, which relates chiefly to the conduct of the war and the operations of the armies in the field, can be otherwise than incomplete as a history of the rebellion without a companion piece that shall show the workings of the conspiracy, which originated and gave life to the rebellion, and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Yet, while there have been numerous histories treating of the martial and political side of the rebellion, there has been none of the conspiracy which constituted its life and which, through its various ramifications in the north as well as in the south, had quite as much to do in shaping the events of that period and prolonged the contest, as did the movements of the armies.

Great Attraction

FOR—

Ladies and Gentlemen

At Wichita, Kas.

THE

Great Western

RIDING

ACADEMY

Will be Open from

January 1st to March 1st, 1886,

IN THE SKATING RINK.

TERMS:

30 Lessons, full course, $25 00

15 Lessons, half course, $15 00

Including free riding in evening and free admission as spectator.

PROGRAMME:

7 to 9 a.m.—Riding and Training by the Professor and his Jockeys; also class riding for gentlemen—open to visitors.

10 to 12 m.—Ladies (primary) class riding. No gentleman visitors allowed.

1 to 3 p.m.—Boys riding on ponies.

4 to 6 p.m.—Ladies (advanced) riding. Open to visitors of both sexes.

6 to 8 p.m.—Fancy riding for gentlemen. Open to visitors.

8 to 10 p.m.—Mixed riding to music, by ladies and gentlemen.

Any person not belonging to the class, and wishing to ride in the day, evening and on Saturdays, will be required to pay 10 cents.

Visitors admitted on admission.

Rules of the Riding Academy.

Outdoor exercises will be held once or twice a week, according to the wishes of the class.

All persons holding class tickets admitted free to evening riding.

Any one wishing to use his own horse in the class will be permitted to do so.