Mr. L. T. Baldwin of the Western States, at an amendment that the construction of the canal should be left to the discretion of the State, said that the amendment would enable the State to construct the canal if it saw fit, but would not compel it to do so. He said that the amendment was a question of policy, and that the State should be allowed to decide for itself what was best for its own interests. He believed that the canal would be constructed in the near future, and that it would be a great benefit to the State.

Mr. L. T. Baldwin of the Western States, at an amendment that the construction of the canal should be left to the discretion of the State, said that the amendment would enable the State to construct the canal if it saw fit, but would not compel it to do so. He said that the amendment was a question of policy, and that the State should be allowed to decide for itself what was best for its own interests. He believed that the canal would be constructed in the near future, and that it would be a great benefit to the State.

Mr. L. T. Baldwin of the Western States, at an amendment that the construction of the canal should be left to the discretion of the State, said that the amendment would enable the State to construct the canal if it saw fit, but would not compel it to do so. He said that the amendment was a question of policy, and that the State should be allowed to decide for itself what was best for its own interests. He believed that the canal would be constructed in the near future, and that it would be a great benefit to the State.

Mr. L. T. Baldwin of the Western States, at an amendment that the construction of the canal should be left to the discretion of the State, said that the amendment would enable the State to construct the canal if it saw fit, but would not compel it to do so. He said that the amendment was a question of policy, and that the State should be allowed to decide for itself what was best for its own interests. He believed that the canal would be constructed in the near future, and that it would be a great benefit to the State.

Mr. L. T. Baldwin of the Western States, at an amendment that the construction of the canal should be left to the discretion of the State, said that the amendment would enable the State to construct the canal if it saw fit, but would not compel it to do so. He said that the amendment was a question of policy, and that the State should be allowed to decide for itself what was best for its own interests. He believed that the canal would be constructed in the near future, and that it would be a great benefit to the State.