COLLEGIANS BUSY ON THE DIAMOND

Spring Play Shows Great Strength In Some of the Big Varsity Nines.

FOOTBALL AND ITS FALL PROSPECTS

Columbia May Take Up the Game Again and Elsewhere Great Things Are Looked For—Annapolis Authorities Are Seriously Considering Proposition.

The baseball season of the colleges is yet only in its third week, but already it is evident that it is going to be a hummer. All the big university nines, excepting Columbia, are showing up in good shape and the race for the championship gives plenty of promise of being hard fought and exciting from the drop of the ball. Princeton, Yale, Harvard, Pennsylvania and Cornell all look exceptionally likely at this stage of the game and there is not one of the lot but has a chance for first honors of the intercollegiate diamond. Harvard was the last of the Big Six to get into the field, but its opening game on Saturday with the University of Vermont shows that the Crimson players may be depended upon to cut loose with some great ball playing when they get a bit warmed up to their work.

With defeats by both Georgetown and Fordham, Princeton's second week at the game showed a slump in the Tigers' work, but there is little reason for any Nassau enthusiast to feel any alarm over these temporary early reverses. Hoytner, Nassau's star twirler who will have the brunt of the pitching to do in the big games later on, was used in neither of the games which were lost, while in both Princeton's batsmen faced the best balltossers that their opponents could trot out. Incidentally, moreover, the Tigers wiped up the diamond the middle of the week with Columbia to the tune of 13 to 1, just to show what they can do when they really try.

Pennsylvania a Stout Bidder.

Unless all signs fall, Pennsylvania is going to be very formidable bidder for the supremacy in college baseball this spring. On the showing of the various important university nines to date, the Quakers appear to have the best of it and, with a bunch of pitchers of apparently very high class, it is difficult to see how the Red and Blue players can be anywhere else than close up at the front of the baseball procession at the season's wind-up. Penns accomplished a great baseball feat on Friday and Saturday of last week in successively taking two games from the strong Georgetown nine, the first by a score of 4 to 2 and the second by 7 to 1. It is rare indeed that any of the Northern college nines goes up against the Georgetown players in the early part of the year and the escapes without the loss of at least one of the two contests usually played.

The handy way in which the Quakers humbled the Washington collegians' pride by capturing the decision in two tries, consequently is a most impressive demonstration that the Pennsylvania outfit is going some. Georgetown gathered in only four hits in the first game and had to be content with a solitary pair in the second. Brady did the pitching for the Quakers in Saturday's contest and struck out every man of the Georgetown team, making fourteen strikeouts in the week Penns went against George Washington University and won by 13 to 7. Brady pitched in that game, and fourteen players also fanned the air only three hits being made off his delivery. As the Quakers have several other pitchers of the star variety on the staff, it looks very much as if the Red and Blue would do things on the diamond this year.

Cornell and Yale strong.

Both Cornell and Yale have shown a lot of early strength and their admirers have high hopes of fine records to come when the heavy work of the spring campaign comes around. Yale won four of its five games on its Southern trip, losing only to Georgetown and then by a score of only 2 to 1. The Elis have got their greatest encouragement, however, from the contest between the Blue and the New York Giants last Saturday. The New Haven players were beaten 8 to 3 in a game in which the professionals made only eight hits, the same total as was made by Yale. Cushing, the new Eli twirler, did the honors for the collegians and the try-out make it certain he will figure in a large and important way in Yale's future games this spring.

Cornell, handicapped by Deshon's poor condition, is, nevertheless, putting up a game that bids fair to make the Ithacans a big factor in the intercollegiate race. In beating the University of Virginia, 8 to 7, and the Navy 12 to 2, the players from New York state gave an idea of what they can do that has done much to make their partisans confident of a string of victories when they get into their real stride against the big fellows in May and June.

Football for Columbia. Prospects now are that football will be restored at Columbia soon, perhaps in time for the students of the big New York city institution to get into line for the game this fall. There have been numerous rumors since the first of the year that the college authorities were getting ready to relax and to permit the pigskin sport to secure a footing on Morningside Heights once more. These reports now seem to have been partially confirmed by the official announcement, made by Francis S. Bangs, one of the powers of the university in athletics, that if the undergraduates will agree to keep the game clean and to see to it that none but men of good scholarship are allowed to play, the university authorizing will undoubtedly give the matter of the restoration of the same their careful attention. Mr. Bangs' remarks were made before the Kings' Crown Society, one of the leading student organizations of Columbia, and it is believed that they are the forerunner of coming action by the university athletic committee and trustees in football's favor.

Mr. Bangs it is his opinion that the gridiron sport had been greatly improved under the new rules and declared that the aim of wholesome intercollegiate athletics would be furthered by the restoration of the game at Columbia. As Mr. Bangs was one of those at the New York college whose opposition had much to do with football's banishment several years ago, the undergraduates and alumni who have since been ceaselessly rooting for the game's restoration, feel much encouraged over the outlook and believe Columbia will soon be disputing itself on the checkerboard field once more. If the ban is lifted in time for the Blue and White to form an eleven this fall, it hardly seems likely, however, that Columbia will figure much in the intercollegiate race in 1907. Most of the other important football colleges have already made up their football schedules for the season and the Columbia players would probably be hard put to it to get games. Yale has already announced that she will not meet the New Yorkers in any circumstances.

Brown Eleven's Games.

Ten games will be played by the Brown University eleven this year, according to the schedule which has just been sent out from Providence. As last fall, Harvard, Yale, Pennsylvania and Dartmouth will be the Brunonians' chief antagonists and four games should be lively affairs. The most noteworthy innovation on the Brown list of contests is a game with Williams set for October 26th at Providence. The Rhode Islanders and the Berkshire Hills players have not met in football in years and the contest should be interesting, inasmuch as both colleges play much the same dashing, tricky style of game and both have been making rapid strides forward in football in the last few years. It remains to be seen whether Williams will be able to make as good a stand against the Providence college men as it has for a number of seasons against Dartmouth, Brown's particular rival in New England. When Brown first took up football seriously about seventeen years ago, Williams was one of its first opponents, if not the first, Williams at that time triumphed by a score of about 50 to 0.

At Uncle Sam's Schools.

One of the most delightful features of Athletics at Uncle Sam's two big schools at West Point and Annapolis, at least so far as the public is concerned, is the fact that all contests are absolutely free. No matter how famous or how mighty an opponent may be, no admission fee is ever charged to see the sport and it is practically a case of first come, first served. According to reports from Annapolis, there now appears to be grave danger that the public may be deprived of its privilege of witnessing games at the Naval Academy in the near future because of a disturbance which took place the other day between one of the academy watchmen and a citizen during the baseball game with Columbia. The citizen alleges that he and his small son were assaulted by the watchman and has lodged a formal complaint with the United States commissioner at Annapolis. This has been followed by a statement from Admiral Sand, commanding at the school, that he is seriously considering excluding the public from all contests hereafter, as a result of the dispute and the difficulty experienced by the watchmen in keeping order at the games. Last year the same watchman who is now in trouble handled a newspaperman during the West Point baseball game with such roughness that he was later convicted of assault and made to pay a nominal fine.

MRS. FORAKER A CANDIDATE.

Probably Will Oppose Mrs. McLean For D. A. R. Presidency.

(Washington Dispatch in New York Times.)

There is a prospect of a campaign in society that in feminine minds will overshadow in interest the Presidential contest. The name of Foraker will be conspicuous in it, too, for Mrs. Joseph Benson Foraker is about to enter the contest for the office of president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mrs. Donald McLean is now president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She is said to desire a third term, and her friends are urging her claims. But when the annual election takes place in Washington in April 15, Mrs. Foraker will be put forward in opposition. Mrs. Foraker has been "spoken of" quietly recently as a possible candidate, although some of her friends are insistent that under no circumstances would she accept the place.

The chief duties, powers, privileges and prerogatives of the president general of the D. A. R. consist of standing at the head of the receiving lines and furnishing headlines for the society pages. But there is no place, not even the presidency of the American Federation of Women's Clubs, which carries with it more prestige among women. It is even said in the high circles of society that while Mrs. Foraker's election to the president generalcy would be of incalculable assistance to her husband's ambitions, should she be elected, it would not be necessary that Mr. Foraker seek further political honors.

President General McLean may not have aspirations to succeed herself, but it is evident she hopes to name her successor. There is a strong sentiment throughout the country against a third term in the D. A. R. Mrs. McLean may bow to it, but there is abundant reason to believe that there is a McLean "state" and it is against this "state" there is such hostility.

Lost The Prize.

"Your honor," said the chauffeur, resting for skidding along the spine of pedestrian, "I cannot afford to pay the fine."

"I suppose, then, you intend to pay the man you injured?"

"Even that luxury is denied me," said the prisoner, "for the accident cost all I had."

"Machine much damaged?"

"No; but I had a bet that I could cross town at 30 miles an hour and not hit anybody."—Philadelphia Ledger.
