SENATE ACTS IN ONE MINUTE.

Unanimously Votes $5,000,000 for World's Fair. AS AN AMENDMENT. Mr. Cockrell Tacks It on to Sundry Civil Bill. SLAP AT HENDERSON. Senate and House Conferes Now Will Get Together.

Washington, May 29.—Tonight the prospects are bright for St. Louis World's Fair legislation. There is reasonable ground for assuming that Congress, at the present session, will pass the Cockrell amendment proposing governmental aid in the full amount of $5,000,000.

The Senate today, without division, adopted the amendment. The manner in which the Senate recorded its will, will give Senator Henderson a bit. It will take him from his dream that he is the lawmaking power of the land.

Cockrell Reports Amendment. At 5:15 this evening Senator Cockrell arose and said: "I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer this amendment, which was referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions and favorably reported by that committee, and favorably reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and favorably reported by that committee."

Administration Favors It. The vote in the Senate today was significant of another important feature. It is demonstrated that the administration favors the World's Fair of 1904. Not a Senator from the administration raised a dissenting voice to the appropriation. No one asked that the matter be debated. It had been discussed fully in committee and informally about the floor and all knew the scope and importance of the Cockrell amendment. Every Senator approached, moreover, that the passage of this provision would be a stinging rebuke to Speaker Henderson. It was aimed to make this as pointed as possible. Henderson had come over to the Senate in the morning to request the postponement of this measure. He got little satisfaction from Senator Allison of his State, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The Senator knew that the Iowa Legislature shared the general desire for the success of the celebration and that all the members of the Iowa delegation had signed the protest against the course of the Speaker. He heard Henderson politely but gave him no satisfaction.

Over in One Minute. At 5:45, one minute after Senator Cockrell secured recognition of the chair, the Senate had registered its will unanimously in favor of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. It is asserted that in fifty years there has not been such prompt disposition of an important measure, in either house of Congress. There is hardly a case of record where either branch of the lawmaking power has, without a moment's question or debate on the floor, passed a bill calling for any considerable appropriation. This speaks volumes for the realization by the Senators that the Louisiana Purchase celebration is a commendable movement of national scope, of historical and educational value to all the people of the United States. It speaks no less emphatically of the influence of Senators Cockrell and Vest and their associates. The former is the leading Democrat on the Appropriations Committee and the latter a member of the Industrial Expositions Committee. Both these committees had examined the measure and there has been no such disposition of an important measure in either house of Congress.
