

GRAND JURY MAKES ITS FINAL REPORT.

Terms All-Night Saloons With Winemore Attachments Hotbeds of Crime.

NEW LAWS ARE RECOMMENDED.

Practice of Carrying Concealed Weapons—Condemned—Ignored Bill in John Thomas Brady's Case—R. Quentin Indicted.

The September Grand Jury made its final report to the court yesterday afternoon, containing more than 100 indictments. In addition to those already found, twenty ignored bills were included in the report. After thanking the jurors for their services, Judge Wood discharged them from further service.

Six indictments for murder in the first degree and seven for murder in the second degree were returned. Out of the total of thirteen, seven were against negroes. There were no more returns against the jury reports, that it did not take up any special work from their lack of time. The heavy docket is ascribed to be the outgrowth of the strike and the conditions attending it.

Recommendation is made for the adoption of new laws and ordinances against the all-night saloons with winemore attachments, which are described as "hotbeds of crime." Until new laws can be passed, it is suggested that the Excise Commissioner exercise more discrimination in the issuance of saloon licenses. Attention was also called to the reckless and indiscriminate carrying of concealed weapons.

John Thomas Brady was not indicted for the killing of James Sprock, a negro barber, in Pat Mahoney's saloon, on August 4 last. An ignored bill was returned against him, as the grand jury failed to get any witnesses in the case, after repeated attempts. Belle Brooks, a negro, who was the principal witness for the prosecution, has left the State, and none of the other witnesses could be located.

Joseph Kiley was indicted on a charge of murdering Emergency Policeman Duncan K. Mackie, who was shot on a Transit Company car at Twenty-third street and Olive avenue on May 24, while he was acting guard. Kiley is said to have made a confession to Detective Keeley, Richard Patrick was indicted for the same crime, and is now in the State Penitentiary serving a ten-year sentence for it.

Charles H. Kelly, cashier of the People Boat Store Company, who disappeared and was arrested in Washington on a charge of having stolen a boat, was indicted on a charge of embezzlement. A full report of the indictments returned yesterday follows:

ROSEBERY'S BOOK PLEASES ENGLAND.

The First Edition of His "Life of Napoleon" Finds an Immense Sale.

ADRIAN ROSS HAS NEW NOVEL.

Collaborates With His Sister in a Story of St. Petersburg and Modern Nihilism—Mrs. Mayne Reid an Author.

SPECIAL BY CABLE. London, Saturday, Nov. 24.—Copyright, 1900, by the New York Herald Company. The Queen has just accepted from Mrs. Mayne Reid an advance copy of her forthcoming book, "Life and Adventures of Captain Mayne Reid."

Lord Rosebery's book on Napoleon is having a great sale, his, indeed, was to be expected. The first edition, which is unimpaired, consisted of 10,000 copies, was exhausted some days ago. A French translation is now being prepared.

There will shortly be published a new contribution to turf history, entitled "Ashgill, or The Life and Times of John Osborne, Jockey, Trainer, Owner and Breeder of Thoroughbreds" by J. H. Radcliffe. The volume will contain over thirty illustrations, including portraits of jockeys, trainers and horses.

Mr. Arthur Ross has always been remembered by his friends to possess a remarkably good personality. Under his own name he is known as a Cambridge man and author of more than one volume of contributions to historical research, but under the pseudonym of "Adrian Ross" he has written much more verse for the English stage.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER

Julia Marlowe says: In all my career I have never had a part that suited me as well as Mary Tudor, and if I can succeed in portraying Mr. Major's heroine as she is I am sure the public will love her.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER

The skill with which the love-story is told, the rush of incident, and the forcible directness of the narrative, have made it one of the most successful romances of a decade.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER

Robert, the prodigal. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) "Through Old Rose Glass" is the title of a volume of charming stories by Mary Tracy Kierke, a writer who knows the West and the South, and who is an Illinois woman, and she writes with an appreciation of humor that is one of her merits.

An appropriate handbook to carry into the Tennessee country or to have close by when reading in the verse of the late poet Laureate is in press at the Macmillan Company's. It is well described by its title, "Memories of the Tennessee." Its author is the Reverend H. D. Rawnsley, Canon of Carlisle. Evidently the composition of the text meant much to the author, for it abounds in sympathy and invites the reader through an intimacy that is both natural and in perfect taste.

They are a series of studies in serious, patient and absolutely impartial criticism, having for their object a comprehensive survey of the views and ideas, as well as the merits, characteristics of current belief.

Mr. Ernest Seton-Thompson's drawings of our native birds, which have been presented during the current year in the Youth's Companion, have won so much praise from nature students and artists that the publishers have decided to issue the drawings in permanent form in a portfolio. The drawings are about two-thirds life-size—each sheet measuring about eleven by fourteen inches—and every bird is shown in its natural habitat. They are the work of Mr. Seton-Thompson as much at home in drawing birds as he is in picturing animals. Indeed, the publishers affirm that every point in the portfolio is worthy of the same treatment which the convenient size adapts it.

What will undoubtedly be the permanent and authoritative history of the Dreyfus case will shortly appear in Paris in two volumes. It is the work of M. Joseph Reinach, who from being a mere spectator in the affair became one of the most active and energetic advocates that the unfortunate soldier possessed. The first volume will deal with the trial and condemnation of Dreyfus in 1894, while the second will carry the story through the struggle to secure revision and the Dreyfus trial, down to the present, when the French Government seems likely to grant general amnesty, including all the soldiers in the dramatic history.

Mr. Reinach undoubtedly has at his command sources of information possessed by no other man. The second volume may be delayed in publication and Dreyfus makes another effort to have his case again brought to the attention of the Court de Cassation with a view of securing his rehabilitation without the face of another trial. This important and sensational work should be translated into English.

Mr. Baile's life of "Paul Jones; Founder of the American Navy," has been accepted by the United States Navy Department as the authoritative work on this subject—an unusual honor to bestow upon a book by a layman. Up to this time Commodore Mackenzie's life of Jones, published half a century or more ago, has been the standard work for the use of the navy. Rear Admiral Baile's history, which covers the life of the man, has just been ordered the United States ships to be supplied with Mr. Baile's work. In a recent letter to the publishers, Rear Admiral Baile called it "a most interesting book," and added: "There is hardly a finer record of distinguished, efficient and brilliant public service, and Mr. Baile has done it out with a grandeur and nobility of contribution to naval literature." A second large edition of the book has just come from the press.

During the past two weeks the Macmillan Company has published four noteworthy novels, "In the Palace of the King," by E. Rieu, "Richard Rex and Ysa," by Maurice Hewitt; "Who Goes There?" by E. K. Dixon; and "The Hosts of the Lord," by Flora Annie Steel. The first four have been in the hands of the public for some time, and the fifth into a second edition within a week of issue.

The original of Miss Abbott's character of Laurie, in "Little Women," has always been thought to be Laurie, a Polish boy. Now, however, the truth, always suspected, comes out. The Polish boy was only a name. The real Laurie was an American boy, who lived in Concord, was Miss Abbott's playmate, and then moved out to Kansas. To this boy in his Western home, Miss Abbott wrote regularly some of the most delightful letters that ever came from her pen, and in one of her last she acknowledges to him that he is the original Laurie. All of these letters will be published for the first time in the Ladies' Home Journal, which has secured them. They will be edited by Laurie himself, who is Mr. Alfred Whitman, now a successful and prominent lawyer in Kansas. The letters are said to give just as much insight into Miss Abbott's loving character for which her admirers have so long waited.

Mary Halleck Post's story, "The Prodigious," is a delight. As the name indicates, it tells about a young man, the son of a rich farmer, who was in a far country alone. He was feeding on his own, and a new influence came, a new experience, and a new acquaintance. It was a plain little woman who changed the face of the earth for Clunie

Those who are forever trying to discover the secret of the success of novels have decided that Lord Bute, who did not work, was the original of Lathair, says the New York Times. Both Lathair and the Lord Bute were written by the same author, and entered the Church of Rome. Lathair seemed to be marching in the same direction, but with the exception of those trifling resemblances, the two are as different as day and night, and it is nearly certain that Dimezel never so much as thought of the former while he was drawing the latter. Indeed, it is a matter of record that Dimezel never met Lord Bute, but once, and then only for a few minutes. The public never will understand that a great novelist has no need to paint the portraits of his best men and women. It is much easier for him to create than to copy character.

Mr. Zangwill's clever novel, "The Mantle of Elijah," contains what most of its readers will find to be the most interesting chapters which led to the Boer War. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Zangwill wrote the book before the Boer War broke out, and it is interesting to note that the Boer War, which Mr. Zangwill who copied the war. Those numerous people who will insist in conceiving of a novelist simply as a reporter will, however, always believe that Mr. Zangwill took advantage of the Boer War to "put it into" his novel. Mr. Zangwill has no need of making a novel out of newspaper cuttings.

Blanche Catherine Carr is the author of a little volume of paragraphs which she has called "Old Wine in New Bottles." An example of the flavor of this new wine may be seen in these quotations: "It is a common habit of women to call men brutes. They should remember that, as with all brute creation, much depends upon the hand that feeds them." "The woman who doesn't say, 'Yes, but' when another woman is being praised is either uncommonly generous or she is desirous."

LAYING FOR THE EGG DEALER.

Defendant to Produce Last Year's Hen Fruit in Court.

Sam Mahoney of No. 23 South Seventh street will produce eggs laid last winter as evidence in the Court of Criminal Correction. He hopes to win by default, expecting that everybody will bolt from the room.

Mahoney is charged with having stolen the eggs laid January from E. W. Brockman, a dealer at No. 86 North Third street. Mahoney says he was storing the eggs, and will present a bill for storage charges, and also have the eggs locked up for disturbing the peace, under the Fourth District. Brockman says he is producing Mahoney for principle, not for eggs.
