

TRAGIC LOG OF ENGLISH BARK

Captain Barfield, Ship's Surgeon, Saves Life of Sailor Who Cut His Throat.

VESSEL NOW AT NEW YORK.

Old Seadog Fouls Main Brace, Saving His Life—Another Seaman Washed Overboard and Never Seen Again.

New York, Oct. 8.—The ship Cumberland of Worthington, England, now tied up at Pier 3, East River, has on her log several chapters of tragic happenings of thrilling interest and strange character. The incidents occurred during her circuit of the globe, and are related in detail by E. C. Curtis, the third mate, who has recently returned from the half-deck house, where he was a sailor apprentice.

"Off Cape Horn," said he, "I went into the half-deck house at four bells of the middle watch to call out the watch, for half a gale of wind was blowing and the ship was just starting to take aboard some heavy water. Three apprentice boys were sleeping in the half-deck, and the bosun, an old seadog of about 50 years of age, who held a master's certificate and had himself commanded vessels of all sizes and types, he having several times circumnavigated the globe in command of his own ships.

"Captain Wadleigh had been brought down from his former high estate through the drink habit, and now, after having gone from England to Sydney as mate of a steam dredge, had signed on as bosun of the Cumberland. It was with difficulty that I awoke the boys from sound sleep, and the bosun, who was wanted to see the other officers, did not respond to my voice or a shake of the shoulder save by a groan. I turned up the wick of the lamp and was horrified to discover that Captain Wadleigh had with his razor cut his throat nearly through the middle.

"He had attempted his life during a fit of despondency and an attack of horrors aggravated by the throes of seasickness and the roar of the gale, of which he in his melancholy condition stood in great fear. While the rest of the hands were busy making things fast I told Captain Barfield of my discovery. The old man could do no more than to order the rolling of the ship, and ordered the bosun put into the sail locker under watch.

"All that could be got out of him was that he didn't know why he had done it. He had barely missed the regular, so there was no danger of him bleeding to death.

"In the morning Captain Barfield sewed up the long wound and ordered the bosun back to the hospital, where he remained three weeks at the end of which period he returned to his duties. The wound healed and he wagged his head so much that the threads pulled out, and he allowed his whiskers to grow, which covered the scar.

DOUSED WITH BEER. AVENGES WITH RAZOR.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. New York, Oct. 8.—With deep razor wounds in face, throat, head and arms, Louis M. Lucia, court interpreter in Brooklyn, and having a real estate and insurance office at No. 349 Linden street, Williamsburg, hovered between life and death in the German Hospital, Brooklyn, while his alleged assailant, Dominico Vignino, aged 25, was in Raymond street jail awaiting the result of his injuries. For a time the attack was attributed to the "Black Hand" Society, because, as alleged by Lucia's brother, a letter demanding $500 was received recently by an uncle of the interpreter, Rosa Lucia, a contractor, of No. 317 Woodlawn avenue. The contractor turned this letter over to Louis Lucia, who promised to investigate it and then report to the police. This theory was promptly dispelled by Vignino, who, after several hours' silence, said, it is reported, that the reason for the attack was because Lucia had doused him with a glass of beer in a saloon at Wyckoff avenue and Linden street. Near this saloon Lucia was attacked, it is charged, by Vignino, who, with a razor, slashed the real estate man until he fell. Vignino fled, but was arrested after being fired upon by a policeman.

SIR WILLIAM WHITE, BRITISH SHIPBUILDER, ADVISES YOUNG MEN TO BEWARE OF OVERWORK FOR HEALTH'S SAKE

Man Who Built Up England's Present Efficient Navy Is Now Engaged on Largest Steamships in the World. WILL CLIP ATLANTIC RECORD. "Do not overwork. Be watchful of your health and do not sacrifice it in the complete absorption of your work." This is the warning sounded to ambitious young men by Sir William H. White, late Director of Naval Construction and president of the British Institute of Civil Engineers. The most prominent worker and best-known member of the International Engineering Congress, which closed its meetings in St. Louis yesterday, was Sir William H. White of London. Contrary to Russell Sage's denunciations of holidays and vacations, Sir William White is a firm believer in them. He advocates them, and urges young men, when he sees them breaking down under responsibilities and work far too great for their strength, to sacrifice their work, no matter how important it may be, in the interest of health. This announcement, coming from Sir William, is most surprising, when it is remembered that for many years he was known as the leader of the strenuous life in professional circles of England. While Sir William admits 59 years, he does not look a day over 50. His manner is quiet but times almost reserved. His friends say he is completely changed from the Sir William they knew five years ago. The energetic, hard-working man, who gave all his time, his thought and strength to his work, Sir William, they say, has reformed. Not that he is a bit less interested in his work, but that he has learned to spend more time at play and less at work. From the strenuous life that characterized him as an American professional man, he has finally yielded to a life some of his more deliberate, easy-going English friends. The experience is a novel one to him, and he is enjoying it. He has built more battleships and cruisers, forged battleships and cruisers than any other man during his lifetime. It does not pay a man to ruin his health in the interest of a few dollars. Sir William, with a recollection of his recent illness, which threatened to end his life, "A man pays dearly for being overambitious. When one finds himself wearing out he should listen to nature's warnings and quit in time to recuperate. Too many men lose their usefulness at an altogether too early age by not taking a sufficient amount of vacations or a sufficient amount of rest." While Sir William has practically severed his connection with the British Navy and given up the work which he is still engaged on important shipbuilding work. In fact, this is one of the most important works with which he has been identified. It is that of consulting engineer to the two mammoth steamships building in the England shipyards, the two largest and most unique in steamship construction. They will be the largest steamships in the world, and their combined cost will amount to $15,000,000. In still another point they will be unique. The expenditure of their cost was voted by the English Parliament, the first time England has voted such a large amount of money for a commercial enterprise of this kind. The amount represents the subsidy granted the Cunard Steamship Company by the English Parliament. This is the outcome of the action of the Liverpool Morgan steamship company, in 1890.

SIR WILLIAM H. WHITE, Late Director of Naval Construction, England, who attended the Engineers' Congress at the Fair last week. He warns young men against overwork.

lines, with the exception of those owned by the two large English companies. The English Admiralty, with the further assistance of Sir William White's suggestions, has had a fine hand in getting more care more for the well-equipped ships than do for the speed of the ship. The most give really little thought to this difference in time. The difference in the time of ocean travel of a few hours, say, is really of so little consequence to the people that they give it little concern. "If the automobile boats become a success, then we shall see a new era in both cheap and speedy transportation. The gas engine, I believe, will herald a new era in ocean travel. Reducing the weight and space of machinery in the gas engine to a minimum, we can then have the speed we desire without the extra cost, which is necessarily very high. The two costly steamships now building will have more power of 2000 pounds, 2000 pounds more than that accorded to any other ocean steamer. The extra speed obtained will be considerable. It is expected, with these remarkable steamers, to beat the record for ocean travel across the Atlantic by one day, making the trip in less than five days time.

HEART SPECIALIST LOSES HEART TO FAIR WIDOW.

Doctor McEnery of London Weils Mrs. McLaughlin of Utah, Who Has Extensive Fortune. REPUBLIC SPECIAL. Washington, Oct. 8.—In historic old St. John's Church a romance, which began in Mentone, France, last spring, has culminated in the marriage of Mrs. Henrietta M. McLaughlin of Salt Lake City, Utah, to Doctor William A. McEnery of London. The bride, who is reputed to be worth millions, is less than 30 and very attractive. Her diamonds, valued at $20,000, disappeared from her room at Mentone several months ago, and in the excitement which attended the loss and subsequent efforts at recovery, the fair American visitor became ill. All chronic affection of the heart was threatened.

heart specialist, and was formerly chief medical director of the Middlesex Hospital in London, was sojourning in Mentone, Mrs. McLaughlin's physician called him in consultation. The acquaintance thus begun affected the heart specialist's own heart, and he was most attentive to Mrs. McLaughlin afterwards in England. The couple then immediately left for Utah. Doctor McEnery has relinquished his professional position in London to assume the management of his wife's estate. Her extensive business interests, it is understood, include a partnership with Senator Kearns of Utah, in great mining operations.

Through Pennsylvania, Cleveland, O., via, Vandalia, Pennsylvania, 12:45, 6.00. Says His Heart Stops. Physicians Fear Man Is Dying a Slow Death. REPUBLIC SPECIAL. Cincinnati, Oct. 8.—A case that is attracting much attention from city hospital physicians is that of William Hess, a teamster, who applied for relief from heart trouble. The man's heart has a peculiar habit of stopping its regular pulsations every once in awhile for about thirty or forty seconds and then resuming its normal action. When the regular beating of the heart stops the man often becomes unconscious, but is always ready to resume his work afterwards and feels no bad after effects. The physicians say that the man is dying a slow death and know of no remedy for the disease. As soon as the cessation of the regular heart beats extends the least bit over the habitual time the physicians believe he will die. Knave Voted After Thirty Years. REPUBLIC SPECIAL.
