

MARS INHABITED, SAYS FLAMMARION

Martians More Advanced in Line of Progress Than We Are, Scholar Believes.

PLANET NEARING THE GLOBE.

Astronomer Inclines to the Idea That We Will Be Able to Exchange Signals With a Strange Race.

Camille Flammarion, the eminent French astronomer, in an article in the current number of Harper's Monthly, declares that not only is the planet Mars inhabited, but that its inhabitants, in all probability, are more advanced in the line of progress than we are, enjoy a more enlightened and spiritual life and know a great deal more about the earth than we know about their planet.

Mars is more carefully watched by astronomers than any other planet, he says, because it is known that it is actually approaching the earth, and the geographical position of Mars is better known than that of our own globe.

M. Flammarion supports his opinion by scientific discoveries and deductions and inclines to the belief that, sooner or later, we will be able to exchange signals with the Martians. In his article, he says: BY CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

It is known that Mars is actually approaching the earth; that astronomers have their eyes upon it, and that luminous projections have been noted, of which explanation is possible, and we know, moreover, that the discovery of canal-like lines in the planet has led to the question of possible inhabitants of Mars, and of the probability of a future communication with them.

It is hard to realize that the geographical position of Mars is better known than that of our own globe, but when a picture of the north or south pole of Mars is seen, it must be acknowledged that it is impossible to give the presentment of the same parts of our planet.

The polar snows are observed to brighten and grow warm under the sun, which melts them rapidly in a summer twice as long as ours, until they almost entirely disappear, leaving only a little ice upon a point which we know represents the cold pole, 540 kilometers distant from the geographical pole. None of these details are known about the same points on our own planet, and even the inhabitants of Mars may be ignorant of their existence, they have not been reached of them.

YEAR TWICE AS LONG AS OURS. We can draw all the geographical configurations, seas, coasts, islands, peninsulas, mouths of rivers or canals of Mars with accuracy, and indicate what district will appear in the lens of the telescope, for the length of the rotation of the planet is known to be the same as that of a second. As the planet turns upon its axis more slowly than ours, the calendar of the inhabitants composed of two consecutive years of 687 days, a lunation one of 68 days.

I do not think these luminous points seen on Mars have been placed by engineers or astronomers of the world of Mars, and it would be dangerous to suppose that they are the result of a simple parallel and double, which we observe upon this same planet, putting all the Martian sea communication with the earth, and the work of the inhabitants of the sphere; this is not the conclusion I wish to draw. Nevertheless, it is not the least true that if the inhabitants of Mars wished to address signals to us, this mode of proceeding would be one of the most simple, and it is even now the only one thinkable by us. They could not have chosen a better place for their luminous beams, although I am far from saying that it is so. But only if it were so, it is to be expected that they would have done so.

MORE ADVANCED IN PROGRESS. The inhabitants of Mars, being of a much more ancient origin than we are, may be more advanced in the line of progress, and enjoy a more enlightened and spiritual life. We may even admit that they are more learned than we are in the study of nature, and that they know our world better than we know theirs, and that our astronomical science is only in its infancy compared with theirs.

I, then, the people of Mars, living perhaps a highly intelligent life, do think of addressing signals to our world in the idea that our planet was also inhabited by an intellectual race, they probably concluded when they received no reply that astronomy and optics were not advanced with us, and that we had not progressed beyond mere material instincts.

It is not exaggeration to say that there is no limit to the number of forms in which life manifests itself, and this fact is an argument to those who trust that there are superior forms of life in other worlds. It shows that direct the primary forms exist there is a possibility of a complete development of nature never lacks form in proportion to the exterior conditions. Thus it is that we have the right to suppose that in Mars there may be creatures with the manifestations of animal life and in the enjoyment of intellectual faculties.

ATMOSPHERE MUCH LIKE OURS. In Mars we can clearly recognize the subdivision of the surface into water and terra firma. Its atmosphere has properties which accord with our own; not only do we breathe from its being farther from the sun, the difference is not considerable enough to be an obstacle to the maintenance of life, but it is not so hot and temperate zones. The torrid zone of Mars must nearly correspond climatologically to our temperate zone, and we therefore state this fact in favor of Mars as an abode suitable to life such as exists upon earth.

TRANSIBERIAN RAILWAY COMPLETES NEW BRANCH. Like Around Lake Balkal in Working Order, but Only Russian Troops Are Carried.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. San Francisco, Oct. 29.—Julius Clerly, general agent of the Transiberian Railroad here, has been officially notified by the Paris office of the company and the International Sleeping Car Company of Europe, which has a service on that road, that branch line around Lake Balkal, known as the Circum-Balkal Railway, has been in successful operation since the 25th of last month. The line is 100 miles long and is now a part of the main line of road between Russia and Vladivostok and Dairen and Port Arthur.

This new piece of road takes the place of the ferry system across Lake Balkal, a distance of thirty-three miles. Herebefore, entire trains of Russian troops were ferried across the lake on large ferry steamers. Last winter when Russia was rushing troops to General Kuropatkin in Manchuria a truck was laid on the solid ice of the lake and trains ran across. As the ice grew thin with the approach of spring thousands of soldiers tramped across on the ice. The new piece of road has been a great relief to the military authorities, and that amount would not have been built with a number of years for the war.

The Great Advantages To Be Gained by Trading at This Store Were Never More Strongly Apparent Than Now

The merchandise and methods which have been responsible for this store's success are the result of a never ceasing effort to establish ourselves even more firmly in the confidence of the people—to achieve that high pinnacle of merchandising fame to be won only by having always served our customers faithfully and well. There's hardly a home in St. Louis or in the great Southwest territory that does not bear some evidence of this store's ability to provide. Every article sold by us is an evidence of our great value-giving power.

World's Fair visitors will find a trip to this store a most delightful entertainment. Barr's is the largest department store west of the Mississippi, fronting on four streets—Sixth, Seventh, Olive and Locust. Five great floors are now filled to their utmost capacity with new, reasonable merchandise. Visitors are always welcome. Any car, if not on a direct line, will transfer direct.

Mammoth Purchase and Sale of Women's and Misses' Tailor Suits

A purchase beyond compare. Our suit buyer, just returned from the East, found many high-grade suit manufacturers heavily overstocked with fall suit materials. These manufacturers were willing to cut up their great quantities of material into the very best fall suit styles, at prices far below regular. Thus we secured hundreds of very choice suits at a great saving from regular wholesale prices, and we propose to give our customers the benefit of our advantageous buying. Sale starts to-morrow morning.

There are about fifty different and distinct styles of suits from which to select. Materials are fine chevrets, Venetians, broadcloths, covert and fancy mixtures. Colors are blue, black, brown and combinations in fancy weaves.

All styles of coats, in both long and short effects, lined with silk or satin. Made with notch collar or collarless. All the very latest ideas in pleated and killed skirts. Sizes are in 14 to 16 and 18 years for misses and in 32 to 44 bust measure for women. All are high-grade tailored suits, in a great variety of colors, materials and styles.
