A baseball writer severely says of a certain player that "he made as many errors as Cain's Financial School."

The baked bean industry in Boston has assumed proportions little realized outside the city. In one single establishment the daily bake is 1,600 pots of from two to eight quarts each.

Rabbi Voorsanger of Los Angeles, California, says the new woman is "a rampant rebellious woman, who gathers in conventions and talks much; a reformer who seeks to lay bare the rotten foundation of society; an evolved species of disoriented Roman matron with a tongue like a lash and a rod of chastisement in her fair fist."

The national council of women of Canada had a long and earnest debate the other day over the question whether the prayer with which the meetings of the council is opened should be oral or silent. The issue was really over the repeating of the Lord's Prayer in concert, but the decision was to continue the present custom of silent prayer.

Among the presents given to Bismarck on his birthday was a model of the monument that the students of the German universities are to erect to him in memory of his student days.

The Liverpool association for supplying cheap food to the poor was founded in May, 1893, and from that time until the following November had supplied 85,000 meals at a cost of $200. From December, 1893, to November, 1894, 200,000 meals were supplied at a cost of $500, and from December 1, 1894, up to the end of February the number of meals provided was 250,000 and the cost $370.

Father McGill, of Milwaukee, takes a remarkable attitude in regard to bicycling. Speaking of Archbishop Kater's order forbidding priests riding on wheels, he says: "When the bicycle becomes more common, when it is used as much as the horse, I suppose there will be no objection to our using it, if we desire. As it is now, the bicycle is too closely allied to the race road to be adopted by me. I look upon it now as an immoral agency."

New Orleans is considering plans for a system of canals, pumps and reservoirs to drain the entire territory on which the city is located. The work will cost $3,000,000, and will require five years for completion.

of beginning the work at once. It is proposed to drain the city into Lakes Borge and Pontchartrain, instead of into the Mississippi River, as the level of the city is so low that river drainage will always be unsatisfactory. Eight steam pumps will be required to force the water into the lakes, and by this means it is expected to keep the water in the main canals at a low level even during the heaviest rain storms. In advocating his system General Herring said that the most approved plans of recent times have been studied, with a view to bringing into play all their successful features to be applied to the unusual conditions relative to the land on which New Orleans is built; that it will be a grand auxiliary to the present scheme of sewerage; that it will drain every part of the city thoroughly, rendering every foot of it habitable and free from the overflows which characterize it now; that it will consequently build up the city and put it on a par as a residence city with any place in the country.

A CHANCE FOR THE MAYOR. New Haven has begun to talk about the dust devil. That is a bad sign, but something may still be done. What is wanted more than anything else is a leader in the fight against the supineness and the selfishness and the scheming that perpetuate the dust nuisance. Why isn't this Mayor Hendrick's opportunity? He has written a letter to the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform in which he deals with the matter rather generally and gingerly. Why shouldn't he step boldly out as the champion of cleanliness and health, and stay in the ring until he, with the assistance that would surely come to him, downs all the indifference and the opposition to the reform that is most needed in New Haven just now. If he should do this, and nothing but this during his whole term of office, his record would thus be made honorable and memorable. He appears to be a little afraid of taxation for the annihilation of the dust. He needs it. If he will figure up, or have someone figure up, what it costs New Haven to be dusty, he will be able to show that we can save much money by being taxed for the abolition of the dust. Economy is one of New Haven's strong points, and it should be taken advantage of in this matter.

THEORIES. There is a theory that the world is gradually growing colder and that in the coldest by and by it will be so cold that nobody nor nothing can live on it. This interesting and attractive theory was skillfully used in a story a few years ago. In the story the cold had killed all but the last man and the last woman. They, of course, were in love, just as the first man and the first woman were, and they wanted to live. They thought the matter all over and decided to get into their air ship and go to Egypt, where they hoped to get warm. They got there, but they found Egypt cold. Even the fires of their mutual love were unable to keep them warm, and finally they died at the foot of a pyramid, locked in a cold embrace, while their little dog wandered feebly and shivering about, the last living thing in a cold, cold world.

There may be something in the theory that the world is gradually growing colder and colder. It looked plausible during the first part of last week. But Friday, Saturday and Sunday have not furnished anything to strengthen the theory. Possibly those three days might be claimed as simply a "flare-up," such as often happens when a fire is dying out. If so, and if the world is to move on to the last degree of cold, the three days must have used up a good deal of the heat that is much needed, and we shall have to pay dearly for the "flare-up." But if the good old-fashioned theory that the world is to come to an end in fervent heat is true there has perhaps been no waste that we will do any harm, and perhaps we are lucky that the heat hasn't been just a little more fervent. Some cooler weather would be reassuring. It would indicate that the elements are not to meet immediately, and it would give an opportunity for debating societies to decide whether death by heat or death by cold is most to be desired.

THE PNEUMATIC TUBE. It is strange that in this enterprising country so little advantage has been taken of the pneumatic tube, but there are indications that there is to be a change. The largest underground tube for the purpose of pneumatic transit and transportation is said to be in use in Philadelphia between the central postoffice and the Chestnut street branch office. It is six inches in diameter, and has been in use two years carrying the mails. In all that time, moreover, it is said that only twenty-two minutes' delay has been caused by imperfect working of the system. So satisfactory has been the service of pneumatic transit that a company has been organized to lay tubes in the principal streets of Philadelphia and to conduct a general transportation business, carrying all sorts of small packages and transmitting messages to all parts of the city. An ordinance for the granting of a charter is pending before the city government, and has been favorably reported by the highway committee, to which it was referred. It provides that the work of laying the tubes must be begun within a year and completed within five years, and the company must keep in repair for ten years streets broken by it, and enter security in $10,000 to indemnify the city against loss or damage. There is no provision for compensation, except that the city reserves the right to impose an equitable license fee for all commercial business exclusive of the business with the United States government. The president of the company claims that he has been assured capital enough to complete the system, and within a month could begin work and prosecute it to the finish without delay. He estimates that 60 per cent. of all the packages delivered from the large stores could be sent through a six-inch tube with a great saving of time and money. Why can't it be done in more widespread places?

FASHION NOTES. Topped Off With Points. So many and so varied are the results of the spreading of pointed feathers and "mercuries" on hats that many a mild-mannered woman looks in profile like a savage on the warpath, and one expects her to out with a tomahawk any minute. But despite this, some of the daintiest hats are among those thus adorned, and the effect thus produced is enough to stamp the hat as new. Take the hat pictured here, for example; no one would think for a moment that it was not fresh from a stylish milliner, and that, surely, is a recommendation. It consists of an oblong straw band—in some models it is a square piece—that is worn well back on the quaint and whimsical inhabitants. From that superior personage, the Recluse, down to "Blarney," the cat with a Buddhististic countenance, all are clearly drawn and stand out like living figures to the reader's eye. The story of the sweet, slighted exile, supplies those touches of pathos that are needful to give the charm of contrast to the completed work. Life was not all comedy in "Teapot Town." Some mistakes are noticeable, such as the misuse of the word "proletarian," and the spelling of "Little Trianon," without capitals. Then the narrator, who nearly throughout the story classes herself with the coterie of spinsters whose chaperon is a "decade younger" than themselves, appears toward the close as "a stilly young girl of a girl." But these errors will be corrected in that second edition which we hope the author and publishers will find a warrant for issuing in the success of the first.

head. It is garnished toward the back with a spangled chiffon butterfly supported on each side by two spangled quills. It is placed on each side toward the front, and a little fall of black Chantilly lace hangs on either side of the hair in back. The straw foundation can be of any color and the same is true of the roses. Another form of pointed feather trimming to become greatly elaborated is the once simple mercury wing. Now these airy affairs are very long and narrow and are mounted on wigs, which sets the wing almost free from contact with the hat, giving an added delicacy and airiness to the effect. A pair of these wings set lightly apart with the long pointed plumes directed from each other ornaments either side of many a hat; or a bunch of them, none touching, and with the long pointed feather of the chief plume set at any desired angle, makes an up-to-date finish for a tiny dose straw that offers no other feature to attract the eye.

Leighorn hats trimmed with a wildness of stiff bows and pushed into several combinations of the "cocked hat" are much worn and are highly commendable for warm weather. A maid in a pale green cotton shirt waist worn with a white duck skirt and a leghorn hat all bright with pale green grasses is a comforting sight of a hot day.

COMMUNICATIONS. A Vicious Protest. To the Editor of the Journal and Courier. The thousands of bicycle riders in this city that are compelled to ride home at night after dark are put in constant danger by the careless watering of the streets by many householders just at dark. In many cases it is nothing but a mud hole, and the bicycle rider going home after dark is very lucky if not thrown. I have been very nearly thrown several times while riding up West Chapel and Elm street. West Chapel street would certainly be a disgrace to any city of 50,000 inhabitants, for it is full of holes and it is still made worse by this soaking at night, and it should be stopped immediately.

A RIDER AND DANGER. "Chronicles of Teapot Town," by Justice Ingersoll. The advent of Miss Ingersoll's story has been awaited with much interest by her townspeople, and now that it is really in our hands the interest is unabated. Everybody is smiling over the amusing sketches of life in that "nice, clean, comfortable little teapot" of a village, and enjoying the pen-portraits of its narrow-minded

"Spillam's bill came back to-day," said the bookkeeper. "What did he have to say?" asked the merchant. "He didn't have anything to say. It was his widow who did the saying. She writes: 'Don't you think that in sending a bill to a man who has been buried three months you are rather running it into the ground?'"—Indianapolis Journal.
