MEMORIAL DISCOURSE IN COMMEMORATION OF PROFESSORS WHITNEY AND DANA.

A memorial service was held in Battell chapel last evening in honor of the memory of Professors William D. Whitney and James D. Dana. Among those present were many of the professors and students of the university, as well as some of the most honored citizens of New Haven, including ex-Governor Morris and Judge Simeon E. Baldwin.

President Dwight delivered a discourse of great eloquence and power, outlining the lives and works of these two great men. In his discourse he said:

"A regretful and yet a pleasant thought will arise in the mind of every graduate and friend of our university who returns to New Haven for this commencement season as he recalls the name and personality of each of two honored men whose long continued service here has recently been terminated by death. William Dwight Whitney and James Dwight Dana were known for forty years by all who knew anything of the institution as having their lives within the sphere of its life, and as giving forth for its life from the central forces of their own rich and abundant influences for good. They entered upon their work for its well being and the well being of its students, almost at the same time. They devoted themselves to the duties pertaining to their different departments of instruction and learning with a similar spirit of faithfulness and with similar enthusiasm.

The years moved forward and the results of them were discovered to be more and more affected by what the men were doing. Their fame, which came to be wide extended, not only in our own country, but in other lands, united itself with the fame of the institution.

They finished their work and passed away to other scenes in larger life beyond the limits of our earthly vision at so brief a remove of time from one another that they must be remembered in the future with a common remembrance."

President Dwight then gave a historical biographical sketch of the two professors and their direct results upon the university. He continued: "It is certainly very interesting as we look back over our past history here and study the progress and development which the past has witnessed, to observe the way in which different orders of men have worked together toward the great end. These two men and those like them were pre-eminently scholars. Others who shared in the duties connected with the carrying forth and up-building of the institution were in a marked degree men of practical energy and executive force. Both classes alike were essential in view of the work that was to be done. But the influence of the two men in the academic community was by no means limited to that which was exercised by them in the recitation or lecture room. All felt that they carried within them the spirit of the university—the spirit of learning and true science. The influence of the two men and of the two in equal measure has been also conspicuous as connected with the sincerity and honesty of their scholarship. Say what we will about human weakness, the nobler class of men are affected in their living by good examples and there is an imitation of the examples we who are here have seen. The life of the place is better for the inspirations that are in it.

Professor Whitney rendered a service to learning which is full of good for multitudes in his office of chief editor of the Century Dictionary. Professor Dana was for half a century an editor of the American Journal of Science. The long series of volumes of this periodical have been fitly said to be a noble monument of the extent and thoroughness of his labors as a naturalist. They may, with equal fitness, be said to be a noble monument of his long continued and useful service to the country in the sphere of science. In the ever enduring life of the university the men of one generation enter into the inheritance of the generation that went before. We who are here to-day know the good that has come from the past gifts and from the past lives. May it be ours to give to the future the inheritance unimpaired in its fullness and even enlarged in its blessings."

A NEW PALATIAL HOUSE

Two Hundred Rooms With Private Baths. En Suite is Opened—"Hotel Majestic" Opens This Morning at 10 O'Clock for Guests.

This magnificent new family and transient hotel is situated in the finest and highest location on Chapel street, (the principal street of New Haven), near the College campus, (looking south) midway between the finest (west end) residence section of the city, and the business center; near the Yale University club, the Vanderbilt Memorial, Osborne hall, and the other university buildings, Republican league and Quinluplacks clubs, Hyperion theater, and "The Green," electric cars to all sections of the city.

This hotel has been especially planned to meet the needs of the traveling public. Every convenience and appliance required that modern art and science can command will be found in this establishment; making it the finest hotel in the state. People will soon learn that life is worth living in such an elegant home, simply on account of its most spacious and reasonable apartments.

Its superb location, its moderate price for both rooms and board, which will be below anything ever before attempted in this city for what is offered. Suites can be secured by the year or for any period with complete hotel service. The house is lit by electricity and gas. Each suite has telephone service with the office. The building is finished in quartered oak, cabinet trim and cor. brass handwork, wood mantels and hard wood doors. The walls and floor of the vestibule main hall and dining room are of rich marble. The roof garden is designed for the use of guests and their friends exclusively; it is very attractive, contains electric lights, summer houses and plants, and afford magnificent views of the city and adjacent mountain scenery. The roof is a pleasant place for guests who desire to read or lounge away the afternoon. The spacious dining room with elegant columns, pink marble walls and floors, cabinet finished quartered oak, lofty paneled ceilings and electric lights is very substantial and attractive, and is open to the public where meals are served on the American and European plan. Adjoining the dining room is an orchestra balcony, also a dining hall for nurses and children. The passenger elevator is divided from the stairs by a brick shaft built from the cellar to a point above the roof, allowing guests and their friends to step from the elevator upon the roof garden. The entire basement is finished in marble mosaic and devoted to a barber shop, toilet rooms, and business purposes usually found in such houses. The house is beautifully decorated and furnished. Every detail of the undertaking has been carefully observed to insure a perfect, a hotel up to the twentieth century requirements and citizens of modern ideas will no doubt appreciate its comforts.

The bath rooms contain a porcelain lined tub of the best quality, a wash bowl and embossed closets of the very best make. The pipes and fixtures are of nickel plate and the entire work is open, and of the very best quality and in accordance with the latest sanitary requirements of the board of health. The building is heated by steam. Water is supplied by a system of driven wells, in addition to city water. There are forty-six bath rooms in all. Five stories, seventy-five feet wide, and 134 feet deep. It is very sunny and pleasant, having no less than fifty bay windows, and is so situated that the sun can shine on every window some portion of the day. It contains substantial brick walls, the front and wings being in Pompeian rock and smooth faced brick, alternating with brown stone trim, and basement of solid brown stone. There are two brick walls dividing the main halls and running parallel and a cross brick wall dividing the back from the front of the building. The entire building is plastered in adamant and all partitions not of brick are deafened, and the floors double and deafened with air space between. The interior wood work finish is treated with fire proofing material manufactured by the Electric Fire Proofing company, New York, which is now being used in all large modern buildings, theaters, etc. This material was introduced to us by W. H. Hubbard, our city fire marshal, who strongly endorses it.

There is a straight hall on each floor, the suites being on either side. At the end of each half there is a door and iron balcony with iron ladder connecting each balcony to the one story kitchen roof. Outside of this door there is also a standing hose pipe to which the fire department hose can be attached at each floor so that there is very little danger, as every precaution has been taken, including a standing pipe in the center of each hall with one hundred feet of hose attached and ready for use. The formal opening will be announced later.

Furnished suites by the year or shorter period—special rates. Transient rate $3 per day and up, including table, Emmet W. Root, manager; A. J. Sinclair, formerly of the New Haven house, chief clerk.
