NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

FEATURES OF THE RELIGIOUS SERVICES TO-MORROW.

A Big Week Ahead for the Whitneyville Congregational Church People—A Noble Anniversary—The Church One Hundred Years Old To-morrow—Dwight Place Church Services—At the City Missions—Mr. Scofield on "Pure Gold Christians"—Other Notes.

To-morrow will be a day of especial interest in the Whitneyville church. The record of a hundred years' existence is then complete, and preparations have been made for duly celebrating the event. In the morning the pastor, Rev. Charles F. Clarke, will deliver an historical address, and in the evening a praise service, commencing at 7:30 o'clock, will contrast the music of a century ago with that of to-day. A continuation of the exercises will be an all day program on Wednesday, the 21st. This will include addresses by neighboring ministers and others whose interests have been associated with those of the now historic church. A collection will be served from 12 to 2. The afternoon session begins at 2 o'clock. A jubilee worthy of the occasion is anticipated.

The following invitation circular has been issued: The Whitneyville church was organized on the 18th day of August, 1795. This being our centennial year, it is proposed to celebrate the event. Our pastor will give a historical discourse on the Sabbath (18th), and on the following Wednesday public services will be held in the church at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m.; intervening a collection will be served. Short addresses by clergymen and laymen, interspersed with music, will be the order of the day.

We trust you will arrange to add to the joyful occasion by your presence. J. M. PAYNE, E. DICKERMAN, Invitation Committee.

AT DWIGHT PLACE CHURCH. At Dwight Place church the services have been held in the commodious chapel the past two weeks, while the church was being thoroughly renovated and repaired, but to-morrow the church will be open as usual and the assistant pastor will preach on "The Redemption."

AT THE CITY MISSIONS. In the absence of Judge Cleveland, Mr. A. H. Hayes will conduct the Sunday school at the City Mission hall to-morrow. The acting pastor will speak at the evening meeting. The Christian Endeavor societies of the First Baptist and the Grace Methodist churches will conduct, respectively, the meetings of Monday and Wednesday evenings.

AT GRACE M. E. Rev. F. A. Scofield will preach at the Grace M. E. church Sunday morning on "Pure Gold Christians," and in the evening a midsummer sermon will be preached.

The Antarctic Continent. The following are extracts from a paper read the other day before the International Geographical congress by C. E. Borogrevink, a Norwegian explorer.

After describing the arrival of the steam-whaler Antarctic off Cape Adair in Victoria Land, he said that the cape, which was in 71.23 and 169.56, rose to a height of 3,779 feet, and consisted of a large, square, basaltic rock with perpendicular sides. From there they saw the coast of Victoria Land to the west and south as far as the eye could reach. It rose from dark, bare rocks into peaks of perpetual ice and snow, twelve thousand feet above the level of the sea. Mount Bobbe, above the rest, standing out shining in the rays of the midnight sun. Conic tops covered the plateau and ran over in mighty glaciers. He counted as many as twenty of them in the close vicinity of the Bay of Adair.

On January 18th they sighted Possession Island, with its peculiar bright standing out sharply against the bright sky. They effected a successful landing on the North Island, pulling their boat upon the shore, and they were at once furiously attacked by the penguins which covered the very ground of the island and seemed much annoyed by seeing the foreigners intruding on their domain. Their hoarse screams filled the air, and it was with a considerable strain of his voice that on landing he addressed his countrymen in a few words, informing them that they were the second in number to set foot on that island, and that Sir James Ross had preceded them, having fifty-four years ago landed there and planted the English flag. They gave three cheers for that great British navigator and also for that commander, Captain Svend Foyn, who so bravely sent out that present Antarctic expedition. The ground on the island was covered with a deep layer of guano, which, in time, might prove very valuable to Australia. The island consisted of volcanic, vesicular lava, rising in the southwest into two pointed peaks of three hundred feet in height. He scaled the highest of these and called it Peak Archer, after Mr. A. Archer, M. L. A., of Rockhampton, Queensland. To the west the island rose gently upward, forming a bold and conspicuous cape, which, not being named by Sir James Ross, it was left to him to christen. He gave it the name of Sir Ferd. von Mueller, whose scientific fame he already as a boy had learned to value on the continent. He quite unexpectedly found vegetation on the rocks, about thirty feet above the sea-level. Vegetation never was discovered in so southerly latitudes before. Possession Island was situated in latitude 71.56, longitude 174.10. It was remarkably free from snow. He judged it to be from three hundred to three hundred and fifty acres in size, and they gave it the name of Sir James Ross' Island. On February 20th they steamed southwards, and sighted Colman Island on the 21st at midnight. Finding the eastern cape of this large island unnamed, they called it Cape Oscar, in honor of his Majesty the King of Norway, whose birthday it happened to be on that day. He noticed great irregularities in their compass at Colman Island. Undoubtedly that island contained secrets of scientific value, which would be well worth the attention of future Antarctic research.

es. On the 22d they were in 74 S. No. 23d they were again at Cape Adair. They landed that night, being the first human creatures who ever put foot on the mainland. The penguins were, if possible, even more numerous here than on the Possession Island, and they were discovered on the very cape as far up as 1,900 feet. In latitude 66, longitude 172.31, they ran into open water again, having this time only spent six days in the ice pack. On the 17th the Aurora appeared stronger than he ever saw the Aurora borealis in the north. It rose from southwest stretching in a broad arc up towards south, and again towards the eastern horizon. The minimum temperature within the Antarctic Circle which they experienced was twenty-five degrees F., the maximum being forty-six degrees F. The average temperature for January and February kept very much the same. The temperature of the water kept at twenty-eight degrees F. all through the ice pack, always rising one degree where a larger sheet of water broke the ice fields. In the large bay at South Victoria Land the temperature kept constantly about freezing point. It was evident that a warm, north-running current existed in the bay, which undoubtedly had a constant direction northwards and broke the ice fields at the very place where first Sir James Ross and they they successfully penetrated to the open bay of Victoria Land. Within the Antarctic Circle the barometer at twenty-nine altitudes indicated calm, beautiful clear weather, and even down to twenty-eight it kept fine. This low barometric indication was remarkable where the dryness of the air should help in causing a high pressure. The movement of the ice distinctly pointed to a north-easterly direction, and the scarcity of ice in the Bay of Victoria Land was undoubtedly not alone owing to warm currents, but also to the protection which the bay had against drift ice by the shore from Cape Adair down to the volcano, the Erebus and Terror. A particular specimen of rock which he picked up, composed of quartz, felspar and garnet fragments, held out some hope that minerals of economic value might occur in those regions.

He made a thorough investigation of this landing-place because he believed that here was the very place where a future scientific expedition might stop safely, even during the winter months. Several accessible spurs led up from the place where they were to the top of the cape. From there a gentle slope led on to the great plateau of the South Victorian continent. The presence of the penguin colony, their undisturbed nests, the vegetation on the rocks, and the flat table of the cape above, all indicated that here was a place where the unbounded powers of the Antarctic Circle did not display the whole severity of their forces. Neither ice nor volcanoes seemed to have raged at the peninsula at Cape Adair, and he strongly recommended that a future scientific expedition should choose this spot as a center for operations. At this conspicuous cape there would, in his opinion, be ample opportunities for making meteorological observations, and scarcely any branch of science demanded research more than meteorology within the Antarctic Circle. He himself was willing to be the leader of a land party to be landed either on the pack or on the mainland near Colman Island, with 800 Canadian snow-shoes, sledges and dogs. From there it was his scheme to work towards the South Magnetic Pole, calculated by Ross to be in 75.05 and 150 east, and Colman Island lying in 73.36 south and 170.02 east; he would have approximately to travel about one hundred and sixty miles to reach the South Magnetic Pole. If it were the means of determining the periodical changes in the Pole of terrestrial magnetism alone, a future expedition would, from a scientific point of view, be an entire success. As to the zoological result of future research, he expected great discoveries. It would indeed be remarkable if in the unexplored Victorian continent, which probably extended over an area of eight million square miles, or about twice the size of Europe, there should not be found animal life hitherto unknown in the southern hemisphere. It was true that the scientific results of this expedition had been few, but when already so many important facts demanded further research, the arguments plainly proved that the time was ripe and that further delay of a scientific expedition to South Victoria continent could scarcely be justified.
